THE COURIER OF THE CZAR

By Jules Verne

CHAPTER XII.

THE next day, the 16th of August, the loud tongued trumpets sounded through the camp. The Tartar soldiers sprang at once to arms.

Ivan Ogareff, after having quitted Zabedeiro, arrived, accompanied by a numerous staff of Tartar officers. His face was more serious than usual, and his contracted outlines indicated a great anger, which was only waiting for some object on which to hurl itself.

Michael Strogoff, lost in a group of prisoners, saw this man pass by. He had a presentiment that a great calamity was about to happen, for Ivan Ogareff now knew that Marfa Strogoff was the mother of Michael Strogoff, captain in the corps of the couriers of the czar.

Ivan Ogareff arrived at the center of the camp, dismounted from his horse, and the horsemen of his escort formed a large circle around him.

At that moment Sangarre approached and said:

"I have nothing new of which to inform you, Ivan."

Ivan Ogareff answered only in giving a short command to one of his officers. Immediately the ranks of the prisoners were traversed in a brutal manner by the soldiers. These unfortunate ones, urged on with blows and pushed with the wood of the lances, quickly arranged themselves along the outer edge of the camp. Four lines of infantry and cavalry drawn up at the back rendered all escape impossible.

Order for silence was at once given, and at a sign from Ivan Ogareff, Sangarre directed her steps toward the group in the middle of which was Marfa Strogoff.

The old Siberian saw her coming. She understood what was about to happen. A disdainful smile played on her lips. Then, turning to Nadia, she said to her in a low voice:

"You do not know me any longer, my daughter. Whatever happens and however trying may be this examination, not a word, not a gesture. It is for him, not for me, they search."

"What do you wish from me?" said Marfa Strogoff.

"Come," answered Sangarre.

Michael Strogoff kept his eyelashes half closed in order that the brightness of his eyes should not betray him.

"Yes," answered the old Siberian, with calmness.

"Have you changed your mind as regards the statement you made to me when, three days ago, I interrogated you at Omsk?"

"No."

"So you are ignorant of the fact that your son, Michael Strogoff, courier of the czar, has passed through Omsk?"

"I am ignorant of it."

"And that the man that you believed to have recognized as your son at the posthouse was not he—was not your son?"

"He was not my son."

"And have you not seen him since among the prisoners?"

"No."

"And if he were shown to you would you recognize him?"

"No."

At this answer, which showed an inflexible determination to avow nothing, a murmur of approbation arose from the crowd.

"Listen," said he to Marfa Strogoff. "Your son is here, and you go at once to point him out."

"No."

"All these men, taken at Omsk and at Kalyvan, are going to defile before your eyes, and if you do not point out Michael Strogoff you shall receive as many blows of the knout as there shall be men who have passed before you."

Ivan Ogareff had now realized that, whatever threats he might utter and to whatever tortures he might subject her, the indomitable Siberian would not speak. To discover the courier of the czar he now counted not upon her, but upon Michael Strogoff himself. He did not believe it possible that when the mother and the son should be brought into the presence of each other an irresistible impulse would not betray them. Certainly if he had only wished to gain possession of the imperial letter he could simply have given orders for all these prisoners to be searched. But Michael Strogoff might have destroyed this letter after learning its contents, and if he were not recognized and he should gain Irkutsk the plans of Ivan Ogareff would be all frustrated. Wherefore it was not only the letter which he must have from the traitor; he must have the bearer of it.

Nadia at length understood all, and she now knew who was Michael Strogoff and why he had wished to traverse, without being known, the invaded provinces of Siberia.

On the order of Ivan Ogareff the prisoners passed one by one before Marfa Strogoff, who remained immovable as a statue and whose regard expressed only the most complete indifference.

Her son was in the last ranks. When in his turn he passed before his mother, Nadia shut her eyes in order not to see him.

Michael Strogoff had remained apparently impassible, but his hands were bleeding from the pressure of the fetters.

Ivan Ogareff was conquered by the son and the mother.

Sangarre, placed near him, only said one word—"Knout!"

"Yes," cried Ivan Ogareff, "let this old jade have the knout and let the punishment continue until she die!"

The knout is composed of a certain number of leather thongs, to the ends of which are attached twisted iron wire. One can easily understand that to be condemned to receive a hundred and twenty blows from such a whip is the same thing as to be condemned to death. Marfa Strogoff knew it, but she also knew that no torture upon earth could make her speak, and she had already offered the sacrifice of her life for her son's safety.

Marfa Strogoff, having been seized by two soldiers, was thrown on her knees on the ground. Her robe, having been torn, exposed her naked back. A saber was fixed before her breast at the distance of only a few inches, and in case she should bend under the pain her breast would be pierced with the sharp point.

The Tartar raised the lash.

He was waiting.

Go on!" said Ivan Ogareff.

The whip hissed in the air, but before the blow had fallen a powerful hand had wrenched it from the hands of the Tartar.

Michael Strogoff was there! He had leaped before this horrible scene! If at the posthouse of Ichim he had restrained himself at the blow from Ivan Ogareff, here before his mother, who was about to be struck, he was not able to master himself.

Ivan Ogareff had succeeded.

"Michael Strogoff!" he cried.

Then, advancing, he said:

"Ah, was this done by the man of Ichim?"

"Himself!" said Michael Strogoff, and, raising the knout, he tore with it the face of Ivan Ogareff himself.

"Blow for blow!"

Twenty soldiers threw themselves on Michael Strogoff, and they were about to kill him. But Ivan Ogareff, from whom a cry of pain and rage had escaped, stopped them with a motion of his hand.

The letter to the imperial armies was found in the breast of Michael Strogoff, who had not had time to destroy it, and it was handed over to Ivan Ogareff.

The spectator who had uttered aloud those words "well given" was no other than Alcide Jolivet. His companion and himself, having halted at the camp of Zabedeiro, were present at this scene.

"My God," said he to Harry Blount, "these people of the north are rough men! Do we not owe some return to our companion of the journey? May Korpanoff or Strogoff succeed! What splendid revenge for the affair of Ichim!"

"Yes, revenge indeed," said Harry Blount. "But Strogoff is a dead man. For his sake it would perhaps be better not to remember him any longer."

"Do you believe that he has acted better by his rash haste than his mother and his sister?"

"I don't believe anything; I know nothing," answered Alcide Jolivet, "only had I been in his place I should not have acted otherwise. What a slash! Eh, what—the devil, we must boil over sometimes. God would have placed water in our veins and not blood had he wished us to remain always and everywhere imperturbable."

"What a splendid incident for a newspaper article!" said Harry Blount. "If Ivan Ogareff would only communicate to us the contents of that letter!"

Ivan Ogareff, after having wiped off the blood which covered his face, had broken the seal of the letter. He read it again and again for a long time, as if he wished to fathom its contents.

Then, having given his orders that Michael Strogoff, strongly fettered, should be sent on to Tomsk with the other prisoners, he took command of the troops encamped at Zabedeiro, and amid the deafening sounds of drums and trumpets he marched to the town where the emir was awaiting him.

They had not long to wait for the lieutenant of Feofar. Resounding bugles announced his arrival.

Ivan Ogareff—the Hashed, as they already begun to call him—dressed this time in the uniform of a Tartar officer, arrived on horseback before the tent of the emir. He was accompanied by a body of the soldiers from the camp of Zabedeiro, who drew up along the sides of the plateau, in the middle of which he remained only during the time allotted to the amusements. One could see a deep gash cutting obliquely the face of the traitor.

Ivan Ogareff presented to the emir his principal officers, and Feofar-Khan, without departing from the coldness which was the main foundation of his dignity, received them in a manner which made them satisfied with their reception.

Alcide Jolivet and Harry Blount then joined the crowd and looked on in such a manner as not to lose any detail of a feast, which was to furnish a hundred good lines for the newspapers. They gazed with astonishment on Feofar-Khan in his magnificence, his women, his officers, his guards and all this oriental pomp, of which the ceremonies of Europe can give no idea. But they turned away with disdain when Ivan Ogareff presented himself before the emir, and they waited, not without some impatience, for the feast to begin.

"Do you see, my dear Blount," said Alcide Jolivet, "we are come too soon, like good citizens who must needs come or lose their money. All this is only the rising of the curtain. It would have been better taste to have arrived only for the ballet."

"What ballet?" asked Harry Blount.

"The obligatory ballet, faith. But I think the curtain is about to rise."

Alcide Jolivet spoke as if he were at the opera, and, taking his glass from its case, he prepared to have a look at, as a connoisseur, the first subjects of Feofar's troop.

But a tedious ceremony was to precede the amusements.

Meanwhile most of the prisoners had passed before the emir, and in passing each of them had to prostrate the forehead to touch the very dust as a sign of servility. It was the slavery which commenced with humiliation. When the unfortunates were too slow in bending, the rude hand of the guards cast them violently to the earth. Alcide Jolivet and his companion could not assist at such a spectacle without feeling the greatest indignation.

"This is cowardly! Let us go away!" said Alcide Jolivet.

"No," replied Harry Blount; "we must see all."

"See all! Ah!" cried Alcide Jolivet suddenly, seizing the arm of his companion.

"What is the matter with you?" asked the former.

"Look! Blount, it is she!"

"She?"

"The sister of our fellow traveler. Alone and a prisoner! We must save her!"

"Restrain yourself," coldly replied Harry Blount. "Our intervention in behalf of this young girl would be more hurtful than useful to her."

Alcide Jolivet, ready to rush forward, stopped himself, and Nadia, who had not perceived them, being half veiled by her hair, passed in her turn before the emir, without attracting his attention.

In the meantime, after Nadia, Marfa Strogoff had arrived, and as she did not throw herself quickly enough into the dust the guards brutally pushed her.

Marfa Strogoff fell.

Her son made a terrible movement, which the soldiers who were guarding him could with difficulty master.

But old Marfa raised herself, and they were about to drag her when Ivan Ogareff intervened, saying:

"Let this woman remain."

As for Nadia, she was thrown back among the crowd of prisoners. The look of Ivan Ogareff had not fixed itself upon her.

Michael Strogoff was then led before the emir, and there he remained erect, without lowering his eyes.

"Your face to the ground!" Ivan Ogareff cried out to him.

"No!" replied Michael Strogoff. Two guards wished to force him to bend, but it was they who were thrown to the ground by the hand of the robust young man.

Ivan Ogareff advanced toward Michael Strogoff.

"You are about to die," said he.

"I shall die," fiercely answered Michael Strogoff, "but your face of traitor, Ivan, will not the less bear and forever the infamous mark of the knout!"

"Who is this prisoner?" demanded the emir in a voice the more menacing because of its calmness.

In making out Michael Strogoff a spy he knew the sentence pronounced against him would be the more terrible.

The emir then made a gesture before which the whole crowd bent their heads. Afterward he motioned with his hand for the Koran, which was brought to him. He opened the book and placed his finger on one of the pages.

It was chance, or, rather, as these orientals think, God himself, who was about to decide the fate of Michael Strogoff. The people of central Asia give the name of "fal" to this practice. After having interpreted the sense of the verse touched by the finger of the judge they apply the sentence, whatever it may be.

The emir had left his finger resting on the page of the Koran. The chief of the ulemas, then approaching, read with a loud voice a verse which finished with these words:

"And he shall see no more the things of the earth." "Russian spy," said Feofar-Khan, "you came to see what is passing in the camp of the Tartars! Look, then, with all your eyes! Look!"

Bringing Her Round.

Bingo (tiptoeing into his wife's room, in a whisper)—I've brought three friends home to dinner unexpectedly.

Mrs. Bingo (aghast)—What!

Bingo—Yes, I have. They're down stairs.

Mrs. Bingo—You wretch!

Bingo—Now, my dear, I couldn't get out of it.

Mrs. Bingo (haughtily)—Then you'll have to take the consequences.

Bingo—But—

Mrs. Bingo—You'll have to put up with practically nothing.

Bingo—That's what I told them.

Mrs. Bingo—You did?

Bingo—Yes. I told them that they needn't expect a single thing; that we'd scrape round in the kitchen if necessary and pick up whatever we could, and that, as I hadn't let you know, that was the best we could do.

Mrs. Bingo—What did you tell them that for?

Bingo—It's the truth, isn't it?

Mrs. Bingo—Certainly not. As if it makes any difference to me how many friends you bring home! I'll show you!—London Tit-Bits.

A Snowstorm Indoors.

On a very clear, cold night an evening party was given in a salon in Stockholm, Sweden. Many people were gathered together in a single room, and it became so warm in the course of the evening that several ladies complained of feeling ill.

An attempt was made to raise a window, but the sashes had been frozen in their place, and it was impossible to move them.

In this situation, as it was absolutely necessary that air should be admitted, a pane of glass was smashed out. A cold current at once rushed in, and at the same instant flakes of snow were seen to fall to the floor in all parts of the room.

The entrance of a frosty current into an atmosphere which was saturated with moisture had produced a snowfall indoors.—Nature.

Easy to Settle.

A famous lawyer once had a singular case to settle. A physician came to him in great distress. Two sisters, living in the same house, had babies of equal age, who so resembled each other that their own mothers were unable to distinguish them when they were together. Now, it happened that by the carelessness of the nurses the children had become mixed, and how were the mothers to make sure that they received back their own infants?

"But, perhaps," said the lawyer, "the children weren't changed at all."

"Oh, but there's no doubt they were changed!" said the physician.

"Are you sure of it?"

"Perfectly."

"Well, if that's the case, why don't you change them back again? I don't see any difficulty in the case."

is all right, if you are too fat; and all wrong, if too thin already.

Fat, enough for your habit, is healthy; a little more, or less, is no great harm. Too fat, consult a doctor; too thin, persistently thin, no matter what cause, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil.

There are many causes of getting too thin; they all come under these two heads: overwork and under-digestion.

Stop over-work, if you can; but, whether you can or not, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, to balance yourself with your work. You can't live on it--true--but, by it, you can. There's a limit, however; you'll pay for it

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the readiest cure for "can't eat," unless it comes of your doing no work--you can't long be well and strong, without some sort of activity.

New Light on an Old Subject.

The man who had been kicked by a mule and was quoted as saying he "considered the source" was speaking of it afterward to some of the other fellows.

"I wouldn't care," he said, "if there hadn't been so much fuss made over it, as if it was a bright thing for anybody to say, but the honest truth is that I never said anything of the kind. When you're kicked by a mule, you're not in a frame of mind for considering things. What I really said was: 'You derned old beast! If I had a gun and you were somebody else's mule and it wasn't against the law to shoot inside the corporation I'd blow your derned old head off, dern you!'"—Chicago Tribune.

Seven.

The alleged supernatural powers of the seventh son of a seventh son are merely an illustration of the mystical powers of that number, which has somehow caught the imagination of mankind. The seventh day and the seventh or jubilee year of the Jews is a case in point, but there are also the seven wise men, the seven wonders of the world, the seven lamps of architecture, the seven sleepers, the seven sisters and the seven senses, the last being an obvious concession to superstition. Indeed, from the seven churches to the seven deadly sins the number for good or ill holds the arithmetical record.

Definition of a Bore.

"You call So-and-so a 'bore.' What is a 'bore?'" asked Bishop Selwyn. "It is a man who will persist in talking about himself when you want to talk about yourself," or, we may add, in telling stories when you want to be telling them. Coleridge says he used to be much amused with Tobin and Godwin. "Tobin would pester me with stories of Godwin's dullness, and upon his departure Godwin would drop in just to say that Tobin was more dull than ever."

AGAINST LIQUOR

A Paper Written by an old Tecumseh Man

MICHEAL ECKERT

The writer has been reading a book entitled "National Reform" by Annie Nelles, in which the author has written a catchy little story entitled, "Mixing the Load," The author draws a very strong word picture for the purpose of showing up the evil effects of liquor, but praises a curse that is a thousand times worse than all other curses combined. I will attempt in my feeble way to show the relation of one to the other. The story runs that Dan King and his wife, Susan, left their homes on the banks of the Mississippi river, where they were counted as true Christians among their friends and journeyed to the gold fields of California, where they hoped to get rich. And having arrived Dan at once proceeded to haul freight. One day a man with a load of whiskey cleared $6,000, so Mrs. King suggested that her husband might mix his load the next trip, which he did, and it was the means of Dan losing his life. Mr. Hayes, a devout Christian, amassed a fortune and invested in land.

Here is where I wish to show that our system of land tenue is the cause of poverty rather than liquor. In the first place liquor drinking is resorted to more for the purpose of drowning sorrow than anything else. If the people of United States would abolish landlordism by concentrating all taxation on the value of land I believe the saloon would die a natural death. The licensing of saloons and taxation of liquor is what makes it such a curse to-day. I have more respect for the saloonkeepers than I have for those self styled saints who justify and laud to the skies the parent of all curses. That curse which enables one to deny his brother the right to those things which nature bequeathed to all mankind alike.

The author says that Mr. Hayes who had been in the employ of Dan King in the capacity of superintendent of mines, invested his money in land, built houses churches etc. He put men to work on his land and established a thriving little colony. Now, why was it that those men went to work on Mr. Hayes land? Surely all the land that was good for anything must have been monopolized or those people could have taken little blocks of land to make a living on rather than pay rent to Mr. Hayes and at the same time with their high state of morality increase the value of his land. Land was never made by the hands of man and for that reason each and every human being should have the right to use land on equal terms with his fellows.

If taxes on all things were abolished which are made by labor, and all public revenues were derived from the rent of land, the liquor curse would fade into insignificance. Take all taxes and licenses off saloons and liquor, then, I venture to say, that no saloons could exist, because liquor would be so cheap that it would not command one cent a drink. The families of those men who are addicted to liquor drinking would not have all the bread taken out of their mouths by the much abused saloon keeper, for it would take but a few cents where it takes dollars to-day.

Alcohol can be made for about ten cents a gallon and could be used for lighting and heating purpose at less cost than gasoline can be bought for to-day. That would not only be a benefit to the men who grow corn and the distillers, but it would be a boon to the millions who are robbed by the Standard Oil trust, which by the present system of land tenure is enabled to control the output of all petroleum products. Like all other landlords grinding the faces of the poor until they become discouraged and resort to strong drink.

Take for example Turkey, where no intoxicating liquors are sold. Is there a more poverty stricken country on the face of the earth? There are thousands of good, brave men who stand ready to do battle for justice if the start is made in the right way, but will not engage in a useless struggle. Starting new parties will avail nothing. The reformers must get control of the old political parties, and the best way to do that is to abolish all liquor taxes and licenses, which will wipe out the saloons and thereby wrest the political parties from the hands of the rum power.

GREAT EXCITEMENT

SARAH McNEIL

Only a New Bicycle After All.

To persons in business the notification that a package of freight is at the depot creates no surprise and the drayman is ordered to deliver the same and nothing thought of it, but to a lady, who has never received half a dozen articles by freight in her life, a postal card from the freight office announcing that a package is there awaiting instant removal, the matter is quite a different one. One night last week as quiet unassuming Sarah McNiel was returning home after her day's work, she, at the postoffice, secured such a postal card and for a time it seemed to her that certainly there must be some mistake "she had no freight sent to her, knew nothing about freight and there was no sense in mixing up mail in such a fashion anyway."

When at home, she with the other members of the McNeil family discussed this matter of freight together, thought over all the people who would be likely to send Sarah any freight and finally, after half the night had been spent in fruitluss speculation, all members of family concluded that it was one of the post office blunders. But that was a hard night for Sarah, dreams, yes bad dreams, haunted her, everything came by freight, from hair pins to houses and lots, and instead of being fresh and ready to work as usual next morning, she was all tired out, a little cross, but determined to come to a final understanding with Tecumseh's post office, that in future only her mail should be put in her box, at the same time fully realizing that all freight packages were a bore and that she wished none would ever come.

When at the tailor shop next morning she discovered that there was a package of freight in Tecumseh for her, that the post master had made no blunder, and on further investigation discovered that this same package was a brand new bicycle for Miss Sarah McNeil, come from her cousin in Chicago and it was ordered to be delivered at once.

But now comes another set of dreams. Sarah rides up and down the streets of Tecumseh, races with all the boys and when she is tired lends the wheel to the different members of the McNeil family making them all healthy and good natured with the exhilerating exercise.

The K. O. T. M. in the person of Joseph Marsh congratulated the guards very highly on their grace and skill in the most difficult work. A MATTER OF FAITH.

Many of the Clergy in Michigan Endorse the little conqueror

Our religious opinions are, as a whole a matter of faith. Whatever denomination or sect we follow we pin our faith on the words and teachings of the pastor. His sincerity is never doubted; that he thoroughly believes his adopted creed is unquestioned. The opinions of the clergy on any subject carry well deserved weight with all classes of people. Many reverend gentlemen in Michigan are testifying for the little conqueror, their praise is not given lightly and only after personal experience. Gratitude and a desire to promise the welfare of the public brings forth such testimony as follows:

"The Rev. F. A. Smith, of 829 First street, Kalamazoo, Mich., says: When I procured Doan's Kidney Pills I was, at the time, and had been considerably troubled with my kidneys. Backache was quite pronounced, being especially severe when I sat or stood in a stooped position for any length of time. Other symptoms usually attending disordered kidneys plainly indicated what caused the difficulty. Doan's Kidney Pills corrected the annoyance in a very short time and I have not noticed, up to date, any indication of a recurrence. As I took no other medicine there can be no doubt but Doan's Kidney Pills were the direct means of curing me. I an most favorably impressed with them."

A Queer Provision in a Will.

The following will, though not especially curious in itself, throws a curious light on the streets of London in the seventeenth century. John Cooke, among other bequests, left £1 "for the maintenance of a lantern and candle, to be eight in the pound at least, to be kept and hanged out at the corner of St. Michael's lane, next Thames street, from Michaelmas day to Lady day, between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock at night until the hours of 4 or 5 in the morning, for affording light to passengers going through Thames street or St. Michael's lane."—All the Year Round.

Her Marriage Dot.

The Emperor Joseph II. was in the habit of walking about incognito. One morning he went into a coffee shop and asked for a cup of chocolate. He was plainly dressed and the waiters, being ignorant of his rank, insolently refused it, saying it was too early.

Without making any reply he walked out and went into a little coffee house hard by and asked for a cup of chocolate. The landlord answered that it should be ready in a moment.

While he waited for it he walked up and down and was conversing on different subjects when the landlord's daughter, a very pretty girl, made her appearance.

The emperor wished her good day and observed to her father that it was high time a flower in full bloom should marry before it faded.

"Ah," replied the honest old man, "if I had but a thousand crowns I could marry her to a fine young man who is very fond of her! But, sir, the chocolate is ready."

The emperor called for a pen, ink and paper. The girl ran to fetch them, when he gave her an order on his banker for the thousand crowns.

A Unique Bequest.

Among the experiences that helped a now prominent attorney to emerge from the condition of a briefless barrister he tells the following: One day a miserly old fellow came to him and asked that the young attorney draw up a will.

"How much cash have you?" was the first interrogation.

"Waal, I dunno," responded the client; "somewheres nigh on to $30,000, I reckon."

"How do you wish it divided?"

"I want my old woman to have $15,000, and you can say that I give and bequeath $5,000 to each of my three children," said the old man, unloading himself of the legal phrase with much gravity and deliberation.

"What else do you wish to say?"

"Say that to each of my several nieces and nephews I also give the sum of $5,000."

"Hold on, sir; this is a work of supererogation. You have already disposed of all your money. How are they to be given the sums you specify?"

"Gol darn 'em, let 'em work for it, as I did!" came the answer.—San Francisco Wave.

Under a Mistake.

The stranger stepped up to the hotel register and wrote his name thus:

"Gabriel Plunkett, Squibnocket, Mass."

The stranger immediately behind him then stepped up, looked at the name, smiled somewhat incredulously and made this entry himself:

"Israel Snodgrass, Snohomish, Wash."

Then the two men glared at each other.

"Think I'm kiddin', do you?"

"Trying to make fun of me, are you?"

Biff!

Bang!

"For heaven's sake, gentlemen," agonizingly exclaimed the hotel clerk, "stop! You are under a misapprehension. I know both of you and know those to be your real names and the real names of the towns you are from!"

By strenuous efforts he succeeded in separating them, and a few moments later they were apologizing profusely and insisting with much vehemence on treating each other.—Chicago Tribune.

WAVES OF WATER.

Slow rivers flow at the rate of three to seven miles an hour.

The amount of water flowing out of the Nile is sixteen times that of the Thames.

The English channel is nowhere more than 900 feet deep. The Irish sea is 2,130 feet deep.

The largest gulf in the world is the gulf of Mexico—800,000 square miles—almost twice as big as the bay of Bengal.

The Parana of Brazil and Argentina is 2,200 miles in length and after the Amazon is the largest river in South America.

The shallowest of all seas are the Baltic and the Adriatic, which average only forty-three and forty-five yards' depth respectively.

Askal Chin, in Tibet, is the lake which lies at a greater height than any other in the world. Its level is 16,600 feet. The lowest is the Dead sea—1,290 feet below sea level.

A Judicial Retort.

Sir William Meredith, chief justice of Ontario, Canada, was formerly a very prominent politician as well as a famous lawyer. He was especially noted for his success as prosecuting attorney, and few criminals escaped conviction when he addressed the jury.

During one of his political campaigns he was speaking at a meeting in the city of London, his native town. The audience was turbulent and he was frequently interrupted. Finally a voice from the gallery cut into one of his finer flights with a sarcastic "Oh, go and get your hair cut!"

Sir William, who wore his hair somewhat longer than is usual, was stopped by a burst of laughter. But as soon as he was able to make himself heard he turned the laugh and won the audience by this reply: "My friend, if I'm not mistaken, I've had your hair cut before this!"—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Fainting.

The direct cause of fainting is a diminished circulation of blood through the brain. To revive a person who has fainted it is necessary, therefore, to alter this condition as quickly as possible. In order to do this the individual should be laid quite flat, the head on a level with the body, so that the feebly acting heart will not have to propel the blood upward. The neck and chest should be exposed, fresh air admitted freely, water sprinkled on the face and stimulating vapors, such as ammonia, held at intervals to the nostrils. When there is difficulty in restoring animation, friction over the region of the heart with the hand or a rough cloth should be applied vigorously.

Exemplifying an Adage.

"Yes," said the old conductor, "I have followed the railroad about all my life. I wasn't exactly born on a train, but I was married on one at the rate of forty-five miles an hour."

"That was a good deal like marrying in haste."

"It was. And we got tired of each other while we were making the return trip on a freight train."

Grow Handsome.

Would you like to be truly beautiful? Thoreau says: "We are all sculptors and painters, and our material is our own flesh and blood and bones. Any nobleness begins at once to refine a man's features and any meanness or sensuality to imbrute them." So there, now, you sour visaged, plain faced people, go along about your business and grow handsome.—National Magazine.

Control Your Temper.

There are three reasons why one ought to control his temper, and the first is self respect. When one loses command of himself and throws the reins upon the neck of passion, he may have for the moment a certain enjoyment in the license, but there must surely come a reaction of regret. When he is calm again and the fit has passed away, every serious person must be ashamed of what he said and what he did, of the manner in which he gave himself away and the exhibition he made of himself. He will recall the amazement on the faces of his friends and the silence which they adopted as a protective measure and the soothing language which they used, as if they were speaking with a baby, and the glances which passed between them. He will not soon hold again with them as strong as he did before this outburst, nor will he have the same claim upon their confidence as a sound and clear headed man. He has acted like a fretful, peevish child and has for the time forfeited his title to manhood and the place of a man.

Untrustworthy Man.

Kate—Why, what makes you say that?

Mabel—Well, you remember when I rejected Mr. Bullfinch about three weeks ago?

Kate—Yes.

Mabel—Well, he said he should certainly pine away and die and I should be his murderess. Now I just met him in the street walking with another girl, and actually I believe the fellow has gained twenty pounds in weight.—Exchange.

Monster Eels.

Many of the islands of the western Pacific have in their streams and lakes large numbers of eels of immense size which seldom are used as food by the natives, who seem to have a horror of the snakelike creatures. The eels of Strong's island, one of the Caroline group, are peculiar in that they hibernate regularly and seek for their place of hibernation the loftiest places which they can find.

These eels sometimes will climb mountains 2,000 feet high and select the summit as the place for their winter's rest. They select or make a depression in the soft, moss covered soil and fit themselves into it snugly, remaining for months at a time absolutely motionless and inert. Sometimes the eels are covered with moss or vegetable debris and at other times they are found exposed to view with their broad, flat heads doubled back upon their bodies. After their season of rest upon the mountain tops the eels wriggle their way down to the valleys and, plunging into the rivers and lakes, begin to feed upon the crawfish, for which crustacean they have a fondness which is shared by the natives. These eels are excellent eating, but nothing will induce the natives to touch them, alive or dead.

Relieved.

It was a long ride through a desolate and dangerous country, and the politician sought to relieve the monotony by philosophic musings on his recent victory and embarrassments that even success brings.

"Hold up your hands!"

The stagecoach gave a lurch and stopped. The ray of light that shot into the vehicle turned the spattering rain into myriads of evanescent gems.

"What do you want?" asked the politician, with a firmness that showed that he had faced danger before.

"Your money."

"Here it is."

"Your watch and diamond ring."

"They are yours."

"Not at all. Are you sure that's all you desire?"

"What in thunder did you think we wanted?"

"I was afraid"—and the politician's voice trembled a little—"you wanted an office!"—Philadelphia North American.

Insect Pests In Brazil.

I should take a small gang of practical coffee planters from Ceylon with good digestions to be not afraid of chigoes, ticks and Berne flies, to say nothing of the dear little mosquito. The writer had extracted during four years in Brazil no less than 200 chigoes from underneath every toe nail of both feet.

Of all the vile insects on earth the Berne fly is the worst. She lays her eggs inside your flesh and hatches three very ugly insects an inch long with three rings of bristles round the body and with sharp nippers. They take about six weeks to develop under your skin, then commence to turn somersaults just when you want to go to sleep after a hard day's work in the sun.

The natives of Brazil adopt a novel way of extracting the brute when full grown. They tie on a piece of raw pork and the Berne comes out of your skin and takes a header into the piece of pigskin.—Ceylon Observer.

Li Hung Chang's "Souvenir."

When Li Hung Chang was in Paris, he went to visit the Credit Lyonnais and showed lively interest in its halls, its stairs, its safes and the room where the bonds of the last city of Paris loan are kept. He was first shown bonds of 500 francs and 1,000 francs and then of 5,000 francs. Taking them in his hands, he scrutinized them, exclaiming frequently, "Joli, joli!" Then he finally thrust them in his pocket, saying, "Souvenir de Paris!" The governor of the Credit Lyonnais went to the minister of foreign affairs with a list of the bonds and asked what he was to do. It was agreed that it would not do to ask Li to give them up, and the foreign office refunded his "souvenir de Paris!"

Firearms In Russia.

As an illustration of how closely everything is watched in Russia, take their system of registering firearms. When a weapon of any kind is purchased a permit must be secured from the local authorities. The name of the man who makes the purchase, with the number of the weapon, is recorded. If the purchaser ever wants to dispose of the weapon he must notify the authorities and cause the transfer to be recorded on the books of the firm which sold it.

He Had the Requirements.

Wife—What are some of the requirements necessary to make a successful poker player, my dear?

Husband (thoughtfully)—Well, a man must be cool, calculating, crafty, deceitful, selfish, sly and have a touch of meanness in his disposition.

Wife (shocked)—I shouldn't think you would care to play with such people.

Husband—Oh, I nearly always win!—Chicago Record-Herald.

Voice Traveling.

Eighteen miles is said to be the longest distance on record at which a man's voice has been heard. This occurred in the Grand canyon of the Colorado, where one man shouting the name Bob at one end his voice was plainly heard at the other end, which is eighteen miles away. Dr. Young records that at Gibraltar the human voice has been heard at a distance of ten miles.

He Was the Only One.

"Did they have a goat when you joined the lodge, Dozer?"

"M'm—well, they had a scapegoat."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Meerschaum Cost In Making.

A fire in a pipemaker's shop the other day spoiled the proprietor's stock of meerschaum and incidentally disposed of the idea, common in most smokers' minds, that this commodity is very expensive. Meerschaum itself is not expensive. That used by the manufacturers in this country is imported as raw material from Austria, but most of it is obtained in Asia Minor. Usually there are three or four different grades, running from the rough and mixed to the pure and finely grained article. There is no duty upon it. The chunks, not unlike cannel coal in shape, are packed in oblong boxes, about two feet and a half long, a foot wide and a foot high. The raw material is quite brittle and has to be soaked in water before it is used for modeling.

Meerschaum pipes are expensive because much of the material from which the bowls are made has to be thrown away before a piece is found that has no flaws in it. The shavings, however, are never wasted. They are used to make a cheaper grade of pipes which are known as chip meerschaums.—New York Post.

Refuse of the Universe.

"It was a Beothuk Indian legend that when God made the world, he swept the universe of the refuse and cast it into the sea, and when the white men came from the rising place of the sun they called the heap Newfoundland and chose it for a dwelling place," says Norman Duncan in Ainslee's. "It may be so. In its remoter parts Newfoundland might easily be taken for the leavings and rejected materials of the work of creation, there cast away. It is as fertile as an ash heap, which, moreover, it resembles in that it contains scraps of everything which entered into the making of the world—iron, copper, coal, gold and all other treasures under the ground. The interior is a soggy, rock strewn barren, an interminably vast waste, where not so much as a shrub is to be seen and no man chooses to live. Stunted forests fringe coast, a skinny growth of pine and spruce and birch, through which you may walk miles in vain search for a schooner's spar. The shore line is rock, in some places swept by flood and fire bare of all soil—grim, naked rock. To many a Newfoundlander a sandy beach would be as great a wonder as a horse."

ONCE IS ENOUGH TO SEE

Gustave Dore's portrait of Dante is worth seeing—once. But once is enough. Some such look you notice on the faces of those who have suffered, and still suffer, much physical pain; people subject to rheumatism, gout, neuralgia, periodic headache, lumbago, or pain from some old lesion. This pain-habit puts its marks on them, as the custom of handling ropes crooks a sailor's fingers; or as too much riding of a bicycle stamps a worried expression on certain faces. No wonder people said of the Italian poet as he passed along, "There goes

THE MAN WHO NEVER LAUGHS."

The complaints above named all yield to the action of Benson's Porous Plasters, and quickly too. Not only those, but colds and coughs, kidney and liver affections, all congestions and muscular strains, diseases of the chest, asthma and all ailments which are open to external treatment. It is frequently said that Benson's Plaster is Pain's Master. It cures when others are not even able to relieve. For thirty years the leading external remedy. The old-style plasters, as well as salves, liniments, oils, etc., have little or no efficacy as compared with it. Use it. Trust it. Keep it in the house. Ask for Benson's Plaster; take no other. A Baby's Birth is very much like the blossoming of a flower. Its beauty and perfection depends entirely upon the care bestowed upon its parent. Expectant mothers should have the tenderest care. They should be spared all worry and anxiety. They should eat plenty of good nourishing food and take gentle exercises. This will go a long way toward preserving their health and their beauty as well as that of the little one to come. But to be absolutely sure of a short and painless labor they should use regularly during the months of gestation. This is a simple liniment, which is to be applied externally. It gives strength and vigor to the muscles and prevents all of the discomforts of pregnancy, which women used to think were absolutely necessary. INSTANTLY KILLED

Grand Trunk Train Struck Two Battle Creek Men.

WERE WALKING ON TRACK

Dell Scott and Philip Griswold Were the Victims—Bodies Were Horribly Mangled—Both Were Young Married Men.

Battle Creek, Mich., Jan. 23.—Grand Trunk train No. 3, the Lehigh Valley express, killed Dell Scott and Phil Griswold shortly after 6 o'clock last evening near the entrance to the yards in this city. The men were on their way home after the day's work and were about 300 yards from the depot when struck by the train. The roadway is very dark and they seemed to have stepped from between the tracks where they were walking to the one directly in front of the oncoming train.

The train was nearly three hours late, and, though so near the station, might have been running 15 miles an hour. Both men were instantly killed and horribly mangled. Their bodies were accidentally found some time after the casualty and were taken to the morgue in the patrol wagon.

The engine, No. 999, was in charge of Engineer H. Williams and Fireman James Whitehead, both of this city. Neither saw the men.

Both the dead are young married men, though neither has children. Mrs. Scott is now visiting in Jackson, but has been notified. Mrs. Griswold was nearly frantic when told the saw news. Neither man carried life insurance.

Guarding the Church.

Owosso, Mich., Jan. 23.—Trouble is in sight at Maple River, south of this city. Baptists of the district a few years ago by subscriptions among friends secured enough to build the Maple River church. The congregationalists have more recently been using it. The trustees of the Baptist society have moved to Grand River road, four miles further south, and announce their intention of carrying the church over to their neighborhood. Maple River folk will resist the removal of the church by legal measures and have announced their intention of meeting force with force. Sentinels are watching out for the Grand River vanguards.

Michigan Pensioners.

Washington, Jan. 23.—Michigan pensions were granted Wednesday as follows: Original (war with Spain)—Charles H. Ferguson, Luce, $6; Raymond L. Horton, Cass City, $8; Edward Evans, Lapeer, $6. Lansing, Mich., Jan. 23.—Reports to the state board of health from representative physicians in active general practice in different parts of the state indicate that influenza, rheumatism, neuralgia, bronchitis and tonsilitis, in the order named, caused the most sickness in Michigan during the past week. Cerebrospinal meningitis was reported present at 5 places, whooping cough at 20, diphtheria at 26, measles at 45, typhoid fever at 45, scarlet fever at 19, smallpox at 133, and consumption at 214.

Albion After Municipal Lighting.

South Haven, Mich., Jan. 23.—A delegation from Albion, composed of City Clerk F. W. Culver, John Groff and G. A. Carver, each a member of the board of public works, are here to investigate the municipal lighting plant. They have inspected the plants in several cities and towns in the state, reporting the one here among the finest they have ever seen.

Duffy Given the Decision.

Detroit, Mich., Jan. 23.—Three thousand people witnessed a 15-round go between Art Simms of Akron, O., and Martin Duffy of Chicago at Light Guary armory last night. The men were very evenly matched, and though the decision was given to Duffy, honors were so evenly divided that a draw would not have displeased the audience.

Reserves Get $50,000.

Detroit, Jan. 23.—Edwin Denby has received word from Washington that $50,000 bounty money had been allowed by the government for the crew of the Yosemite, which was manned by the Michigan Naval Reserves from Saginaw and Detroit. This is not prize money, but is given for sinking the Antonio Lopez in the battle of San Juan, Porto Rico.

MICHIGAN BRIEFS.

Floyd Gibson, in jail at Marshall on the charge of wife beating, escaped Wednesday night.

A Deep Mystery.

It is a mystery why women endure Backache, Headache, Nervousness Sleeplessness, Melancholy, Fainting and Dizzy Spells when thousands have proved that Electric Bitters will quickly cure such troubles. "I suffered for years with kidney trouble," writes Mrs. Phebe Cherley, of Peterson, Ia., "and a lame back pained me so I could not dress myself, but Electric Bitters wholly cured me, and although 73 years old, I now am able to do all my housework." It overcomes Constipation, improves appetite, gives perfect health. Only 50c at C. A. Wright's drug store.

In Bright's Disease the kidneys become so spongy that they fall apart and the victim dies. Your case is not yet that serious, but may be any day if you run along as you are. Don't defy disease, but take Kid-Ne-Oids at once. 50c. Sugar coated tablets. For sale by Elkins-Widener Syndicate Are After Traction Lines—Morse of New York Wants the 'Phones—Detroit People Are Asking for Options.

Cleveland, Jan. 23.—Representatives of the Elkins-Widener syndicate have examined all the traction interests of the Everett-Moore syndicate, with the object in view of purchasing the extensive railway interests, including the property in this city. It is said that the representatives of the Elkins-Widener syndicate are well satisfied with the physical condition of the traction lines and consider it a desirable investment.

It is now practically settled that either the Federal telephone system or the entire traction system will be sold in a lump. The sale of either property will eliminate the necessity of selling the other. Even if it is necessary to include in the deal the sale of the Cleveland Electric Railway Co., the principal local street car system it will be made as part of the Everett-Moore traction properties.

According to Chairman Newcomb, C. W. Morse of New York stands in the lead of the several parties who have been looking into the telephone properties with the purpose of buying them as a whole. It is also understood that eastern bond houses are after a controlling interest in the telephone interests.

The Elkins-Widener syndicate is one of the most powerful in the United States. It is understood that if this interest gets control of the Everett-Moore properties, it will complete the work planned by the Everett-Moore people.

Mr. Newcomb said that no undervalue price will be considered for any of the properties. The cancelling of the obligations of the syndicate and the preservation of equities is what the committee is after.

In regard to the conference at Detroit Tuesday, when members of the committee were approached with reference to the purchase of the uncompleted plant of the People's Telephone Co., a part of the Federal Telephone Co., Mr. Newcomb said that Detroit parties are anxious to get an option on the property. None will be given, however, for some time, because of the negotiations pending for the sale of the telephone interests in a lump. Should the Federal system not be sold entirely, an option may be granted for the sale of the Detroit property.

It is said that the Bell Telephone Co. has representatives watching the trend of events, but it is the wish of the promoters of that company to keep it in independent hands.

Cleveland Again Able to Hunt.

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 23.—Ex-President Cleveland left Princeton last night for the south, where he will remain several days, hunting with Col. E. C. Benedict, Rear-Admiral R. D. Evans, Gen. Anson G. McCook and Herman May. The party will go to Georgetown, S. C., and shortly after arriving there will go to the home of Col. Alexander, who lives on an island 18 miles from that city. Mr. Cleveland appears to have regained his normal health. He was accompanied as far as Philadelphia by Mrs. Cleveland.

Cast Out Maclay's History.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 23.—The senate has unanimously adopted an order directing the state librarian of Maryland to remove from the state library the third volume of Maclay's history of the United States navy. The senate also unanimously adopted a resolution urging the adoption of a congressional resolution extending a vote of thanks to Rear Admiral Schley for gallantry in the battle of Santiago.

Railroad Well Guarded.

Panama, Jan. 23.—The railroad stations to La Boca, which occupied weak positions during the last attack of the liberals, are now guarded by 600 men. These troops have thrown up entrenchments. The survivors of the crew of steamer Lautaro, sunk by the liberals during the naval engagement of Monday last, sail today for Valparaiso on the Chilean steamer Loa.

Disease Does Quick Work.

Cleveland, Jan. 23.—John Koehler and John Otterman, two workmen employed in the water works tunnel which extends several miles out into the lake, were attacked by the peculiar disease known as "the bends" and both died an hour or two after the attack. Their death was the cause for crib No. 2 displaying signals of distress and to which a tug responded.

Scheepers Already Executed.

New York, Jan. 23.—It has just been discovered that through a cable error an Associated Press dispatch announced that the death sentence upon Commandant Scheepers, of the Boer army, had been confirmed by Kitchener, and that he would be executed next Saturday. The fact is that he was executed on last Saturday, Jan. 18.

A Home for Lepers.

Washington, Jan. 23.—Senator Platt of New York has introduced a bill providing for the establishment of a home for lepers in the United States. The bill provides for the location of the home in the dry climate of the interior and places the establishment in the control of a commissioner, to be a physician.

Denmark is Willing.

Copenhagen, Jan. 23.—It has been definitely decided that the treaty with the United States providing for the sale of the Danish West Indies is to be signed at Washington this week. All the formalities here are completed.

Argued Boundary Question.

Washington, Jan. 23.—The question of the boundary dispute between the United States and Great Britain was revived yesterday temporarily in the senate committee on foreign relations. The subject came up in connection with the treaty authorizing the fixing of the meridian line which was negotiated several years ago. That treaty has been before the senate ever since, but it was side-tracked by the appointment of the high joint commission and has lain dormant and unacted upon. In the discussion the members of the committee were generally of opinion that the matter should be allowed to rest until the more general questions affecting the boundary are disposed of, and the treaty was referred to Senator Foraker for further investigation, if deemed necessary.

HEALTH BOARD IN SESSION

Superintendent Evans of Caro Public Schools Gave the Smead School Sanitary System a Severe Scoring Before the Board.

Caro, Mich., Jan. 22.—The fiftieth convention of the state board of health, and the first gathering of the kind ever held in this country, opened at the opera house here yesterday afternoon. Secretary Baker of the state board of health, Health Officer Delano of Grand Rapids and Dr. McLachlan of Detroit comprised the outside representation.

The first session was opened by the usual addresses of welcome by the village dignitaries, music and invocation. Dr. Delano considered the subject of the disposal of garbage, and in the discussion which followed ex-Deputy Adjutant-General Richardson aroused considerable interest by claiming that Dr. Delano's outline of the plan in vogue in Grand Rapids was wholly impracticable for a town like Caro, and the good-natured sparring was decidedly lively for an opening session.

Prof. Evans of the Caro schools read an important paper on "School sanitation." He roundly scored the Smead dry closet system and the Smead system of ventilation in use in the Caro high school building.

A largely increased attendance at the evening session was evidence of growing local interest in the convention. In Mrs. C. H. Hawley's paper on contagious consumption, she maintained that every sixth death in the world occurred from that disease. If the same were true of typhoid or scarlet fever, she said, the world would be alarmed, and the demand would be too imperative to be ignored for places of detention for hose afflicted with the disease.

At today's session several authorities of state reputation will take part.

Money in Cucumbers.

Muskegon, Mich., Jan. 22.—The Heinz Pickle company of Pennsylvania, who located a factory in Oceana county last season, proved a great help to the farmers. Twenty-three thousand bushels of cucumbers were raised last summer for the factory, one man planting two and a half acres, on which he realized $228. The coming year the company will give 50 cents per bushel, and many more acres will be planted, the soil having been found to be the right kind for the raising of cucumbers.

Gave Smallpox at a Wedding.

Coldwater, Mich., Jan. 22.—The outbreak of smallpox at Bronson and Gilead is due to a woman who came from the northern part of the state to visit her two sisters, Mrs. George Monroe and Mrs. Ami Parham. After being cautioned by doctors not to go away from her sister's home, she attended the wedding of the daughter of Mrs. Parham. The guests present numbered over 50, six of whom are now down with the disease. The schools and churches at Bronson are closed.

Witnesses Need Not Appear.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 22.—Circuit Judge Wiest has notified both prosecution and defense that they need have no witnesses at Mason when the case of bribery against ex-Speaker Adams is called today. This is taken as positive indication that Adams will be discharged owing to inability to secure Pratt's testimony under the ruling of the supreme court. Inasmuch as the case against W. A. French is in precisely the same condition, his discharge is also looked for.

Death by an Awful Fall.

Calumet, Mich., Jan. 22.—An accident has occurred at Tamarack mine resulting in the death of Joseph Plese, a miner. He was riding up the vertical shaft in the bucket and had some tools with him. A shovel caught in the timbering and threw Plese out. He fell several hundred feet and was killed instantly.

A Strike at Slot Machines.

Pontiac, Mich., Jan. 22.—The calendar for the February term of court will contain 74 civil cases, 15 of which are jury cases, 11 non-jury, and 48 chancery. The criminal docket will embrace 22 or 23 cases, of which 19 are the result of the recent crusade against nickel-in-the-slot machines.

Peculiar Affections.

Flint, Mich., Jan. 22.—Susie Robinson has made complaint in justice court against her husband for assault and battery. She protested that they loved each other, but what aggravated her was his showing his love in the manner he did, which consisted of dragging her around by the hair.

Struck Mineral Water.

Muskegon, Mich., Jan. 22.—A flowing well of mineral water has been struck at a depth of 230 feet on the property bought by Dr. Jackson at North Muskegon last summer, and which is being improved for a resort. A sanitarium may be built there.

Senator Gad Smith Resigns.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 22.—In view of his appointment as collector for the port of Marquette, Gad Smith has resigned as state senator from the Marquette district, and the resignation has been accepted by Gov. Bliss.

Ashley Will Stay.

Saginaw, Mich., Jan. 22.—In an interview, President W. R. Burt of the Ann Arbor railroad stated that General Manager H. W. Ashley has withdrawn his resignation and will continue in his present position.

Copeland's Name Suggested.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Jan. 23.—The congressional pot continues to boil, the latest being that the friends of Mayor Roy S. Copeland have signed a written request asking him to allow his name to be used as a candidate. Mayor Copeland has not yet definitely decided what he will do, but it is believed that if matters shape themselves he will give his consent.

Peppered With Fine Shot.

Alpena, Mich., Jan. 23.—Harry Bye and John Soper of Long Rapids quarreled over a harness. Bye got possession and started away with it, when Soper returned to the house and, bringing out a shotgun, fired at Bye, filling his side and arm with No. 6 shot. A warrant has been issued for Soper's arrest.

ENORMOUS EMBEZZLEMENTS

Alleged Against Cincinnati Man—But He Denies Charges.

Cincinnati, Jan. 23.—Sensational reports were published here of an alleged shortage in the books of Theodore Braemer, who resigned last Sunday his position as secretary and treasurer of the J. & F. Schroth Packing Co. of this city. The story, as first published, alleged a shortage of from $160,000 to $400,000, extending over a period of 20 years, and claimed that Mr. Braemer had turned over all of his property and chattels in trust, pending an examination of the books by experts. Braemer denied that there was any defalcation, but admitted that he had turned $72,000 in personal property over to Harlan Cleveland, his attorney, and Joseph W. O'Hara, attorney for the Schroth company. While Braemer talked freely about the case, the Schroths refused to say anything and the attorneys were also reticent.

Braemer is 45 years old and has been with the Schroths 27 years, most of the time receiving $25 per week as bookkeeper, and in recent years twice that much as secretary and treasurer. The firm did a business of about a million dollars a year, which was handled by Braemer.

When John Schroth died, more than a year ago, Lieut.-Gov. Carl Nippert became the attorney of his heirs, who instituted an investigation of the company. This finally culminated in a meeting of all interested parties last Sunday, at which Braemer resigned and from which the sensational reports emanated. No reports of similar character ever created such a sensation in this city, as Mr. Braemer always has been regarded as a man of the highest business and social standing.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

Conditions Under Which Gen. Alban Was Killed.

Colon, Colombia, Jan. 23.—Just prior to the attack by the gunboats of the Colombian liberals upon the Colombian government steamers Lautaro and Chucuito, in the harbor of Panama last Monday morning, Gen. Carlos Alban, the former military governor of this district, who was killed in the engagement, was standing on the deck of the Lautaro trying to induce the chief engineer of that vessel to put to sea immediately. This the latter declined to do on the ground that it would be imprudent with only himself, a blacksmith and three firemen in his department. The first shot from the revolutionary gunboat struck the Lautaro. There were about 150 soldiers on board the Lautaro and a stampede occurred among them. But Gen. Alban, retaining his composure, made the captain of the Lautaro take charge of the guns which had been mounted on that vessel. He supervised everything himself until he was struck by the bullet that killed him. The body of Gen. Alban has not yet been recovered.

To Be a Princely Dinner.

New York, Jan. 23.—The New Yorker Staats Zeitung announces that the dinner to be given by the American press in honor of Prince Henry of Prussia has been definitely fixed for Wednesday, Feb. 26, at the Waldorf-Astoria. Within a few days about 900 invitations to editors and publishers of daily newspapers throughout the United States will be sent out. Outside of Prince Henry's suite and the officials whose presence is a matter of course, only newspapermen will be invited.

Schwab Meets Francis Joseph.

Vienna, Jan. 23.—The mayor of Vienna presented Charles M. Schwab, president of the United States steel corporation, to Emperor Francis Joseph at the citizen's ball last night. The emperor and Mr. Schwab conversed at some length upon commercial matters. The emperor expressed his regret at the early departure of Mr. Schwab from Vienna, as it would prevent his majesty from receiving him again.

Fear Uprising at Coronation.

London, Jan. 23.—The Daily Mail publishes an alarmist dispatch from Madrid, giving the opinions of various prominent politicians concerning the gloomy outlook in Spain and their fears that the coronation of King Alfonso next May may be the signal for a revolution. The Daily Mail's correspondent declares that in addition to the Carlist menacings, "Weyler, the Spanish Boulanger, is troubling the waters and playing for his own hand."

Cuban Soldiers Return.

New York, Jan. 23.—The Munson line steamer Olinda has arrived from Cuba ports with troops E, F, G and H of the Secondy cavalry, Lieut. Col. E. C. Dimmick commanding, 15 officers and 257 men who return home after three years' service in Cuba. The men will proceed to Forts Meyer and Ethan Allen. They are in splendid health after their long service in Cuba.

She Reached the Hundred Mark.

IT WAS A PRETTY PISTOL.

But It Proved Too Expensive For the Bachelor Girls.

"No, we don't keep a pistol in our apartment any more," said the girl who draws for the magazines and shares a small flat with a young woman who teaches in one of the private schools; "not since an experience we had last winter. Before that we did, and we had a perfect beauty of a pistol, too," she added in a tone of regretful reminiscence, "silver mounted and handle inlaid with pearl. We spent a good deal more than we could afford for it, but we didn't like those plain steel things. Now it's gone, though. I had to give it away, and I don't suppose Marian will ever consent to our having another.

"You see, this is what happened: I was the one who knew more about handling a pistol, so I used to sleep with it under my pillow. We were both awfully afraid of burglars, and after there had been a series of robberies in our neighborhood we were so terror stricken that we were ready to take alarm at the slightest sound. One night, to our horror, we were both aroused by a creaking noise and then a light bump, just as if some one, tiptoeing around, had stumbled against something. For an instant we were simply paralyzed with fright. Then, looking tremblingly about the room, I made out over in one corner a tall, dark figure, perfectly motionless. I reached cautiously for the pistol, aimed it and fired twice. The figure did not fall, and the horribly strange thing was that it did not move or make a sound. Yet I felt sure I had hit it.

"Although we were frightened half to death we felt we must get up and light the gas to investigate. By that time people from the other apartments in the building were rushing to our door to find out what the shots meant. Well, the light revealed matters. I had simply ruined Marian's new forty dollar coat which hung on a hook in that corner. The noise we heard? Oh, that was some one on the floor below who had come in late and stumbled against a chair."—New York Tribune.

A FATAL MEAL.

The Untimely Ending of a Crow Who Swallowed a Centiped.

"Saw a curious thing in California last winter," said the man who travels about. "I had stopped for a moment to chat with a man who was plowing, when he called my attention to a large centiped that he had just plowed up.

"'Come along with me a few feet,' said he, 'and let's see what those crows will do when they find it.'

"There were several large carrion crows that had been following the farmer and picking up the insects that were turned up, and they were now a few feet away, waiting for the plow to start again.

"We went on a few feet, and the crows followed. One big, black fellow soon saw the centiped and swallowed him at one gulp. Then, in the expressive slang of the day, there was something doing in the neighborhood of that crow. With a caw of despair he mounted into the air for perhaps a hundred feet, then fell heels over head till he was a few feet from the ground. Then he managed to catch himself and flew upward again and away for the hills, cawing wildly. He had not gone more than 300 feet when he lost all control of himself and fell like a shot to the ground. We went over to where he had fallen and found him on his back with his feet in the air, stone dead.

"In a way I know how that crow felt when he awoke to the situation. I hadn't forgotten my first spoonful of tabasco sauce that a joking friend once talked me into swallowing."—Detroit Free Press.

THE COURIER OF THE CZAR

By Jules Verne

CHAPTER XIV.

"Is the road deserted?" he asked.

"Without a soul on it," replied Nadia.

"Do you not hear some noise behind?"

"Truly."

"If these are the Tartars, we must hide ourselves. Look well."

"Listen, Michael!" replied Nadia, ascending the road, which diverged some paces to the right.

Michael Strogoff stopped an instant alone, stretching his ears to listen.

Nadia returned almost immediately and said:

"He is alone?"

"Alone."

Michael Strogoff hesitated for a moment. Ought he to hide, or ought he, on the contrary, try the chance of finding a place in his vehicle, if not for himself, at least for her? For himself, he would be content to rest his hand on it and would push when needed, for his legs were far from failing him, but he felt that Nadia, dragged on foot since the passage of the Obi—namely, for more that eight days—was at the end of her strength.

It was a very dilapidated vehicle, able to hold at most three persons—what is called in that country a kibitka.

The kibitka is usually drawn by three horses, but this one was drawn only by one horse, with long hair and a long tail, but its Mongolian blood affirmed strength and courage.

Nadia at once saw that this young man was a Russian. He had a sweet and phlegmatic appearance which inspired confidence.

Moreover, he did not appear to be in the least hurry. He walked with a quiet step in order not to overdrive his horse, and to see him one could never have believed that he was following a route which the Tartars might cut off at any moment.

"And where are you going in this fashion?" he asked her as he looked pleasantly round.

At the sound of his voice Michael Strogoff said to himself that he had heard it somewhere, and without doubt it was sufficient to cause him to recognize the driver of the kibitka, for his face at once became serene.

"Well, now, where are you going?" repeated the young man, addressing himself more directly to Michael Strogoff.

"We were going to Irkutsk," answered the latter.

"Oh, my good man, do you not know, then, that there are many, many versts between this and Irkutsk?"

"I know it."

"And you are going on foot?"

"On foot."

"As for you, it's all right, but the miss?"

"She is my sister," said Michael Strogoff, who thought it more prudent to give this name again to Nadia.

"Yes, your sister, my good man. But, believe me, she will never be able to reach Irkutsk."

"Friend," replied Michael Strogoff as he drew near, "the Tartars have robbed us, and I have not a copeck to offer thee, but if you will take my sister near you I will follow the carriage on foot. I will run if it be necessary and will not delay you one hour."

"Brother," cried Nadia, "I do not wish it! I do not wish it! Sir, my brother is blind!"

"Blind!" said the young man in a voice moved with emotion.

"The Tartars have burned out his eyes!" answered Nadia, stretching out her hands as though to implore pity.

"Burned your eyes? Oh, poor, dear man! I am going to Krasnoiarsk. Well, now, why do you not mount with your sister into the kibitka? In sitting a little closer we shall hold each other up. Besides, my dog will not refuse to go on foot. Only I do not go fast in order to spare my horse."

"Friend, what do they call you?" asked Michael Strogoff.

"I am called Nicholas Pigassof."

"It is a name that I shall never forget," answered Michael Strogoff.

"Well, then, mount, my good blind man. Your sister shall be near you at the back of the car; I in front to conduct. There are some good birch bark and some barley straw on the bottom. It's like a nest. Come, Serko, give us room."

The dog jumped off without much asking. It was an animal of the Siberian breed, with a gray hide, medium size, with a good, large and caressing head, and which appeared to be very attached to his master.

Michael Strogoff and Nadia in an instant were installed in the kibitka. Michael Strogoff had stretched out his hands as though to search those of Nicholas Pigassof.

"Is it my hands you wish to press?" said Nicholas. "Here they are, my good man. Shake them as much as you like."

The kibitka was soon in motion. The horse, which Nicholas never struck, ambled along. If Michael Strogoff did not gain much in rapidity, at least new fatigues would be spared to Nadia. And such was the exhaustion of the young girl that, rocked by the monotonous motion of the kibitka, she soon fell into a sleep that resembled an utter prostration. Michael Strogoff and Nicholas made a bed for her on the birch leaves as well as they were able. The compassionate young man was much moved, and if a tear did not escape the eyes of Michael Strogoff in truth it was because the redhot iron had burned them dry.

"She is pretty," said Nicholas.

"Yes," answered Michael Strogoff.

"These darlings would be strong, for they are courageous, but they are really only weak. Do you come a great distance?"

"From a great distance."

"Poor young folks! It must have hurt you much when they burned your eyes."

"Very much," said Michael Strogoff, turning as though he could see Nicholas.

"Did you not cry?"

"Yes."

"I also should have cried. To think that one can never see again those he loves! Anyhow they see you. That is perhaps some consolation."

"Yes, perhaps. Tell me, friend," demanded Michael Strogoff, "have you never seen me anywhere before today?"

"You, my good man? No, never."

"It is because the sound of your voice is not unknown to me."

"Do you see?" said Nicholas, smiling. "He knows the sound of my voice. Perhaps you ask me this to learn whence I come. Oh, I am going to tell you. I am coming from Kalyvan."

"From Kalyvan?" said Michael Strogoff. "Well, then it is there that I met you. You were at the telegraph office?"

"That may be," answered Nicholas. "I lived there. I was employed as telegraph operator."

"And you remained at your post to the last moment?"

"Eh! It is especially at that moment one ought to be there."

"It was the day when an Englishman and a Frenchman, rubles in their hands, disputed the turn at your wicket, and when the Englishman telegraphed the first verses of the Bible?"

"That, my good man, is possible, but I do not remember it."

"What! You do not remember it?"

"I never read the dispatches which I transmit. My duty being to forget them, the shortest way is to be ignorant of them."

This answer was characteristic of Nicholas Pigassof.

However, the kibitka kept on its easy course, which Michael Strogoff would have liked to render more rapid, but Nicholas and his horse were accustomed to a gait from which neither the one nor the other could depart. The horse walked for three hours and then rested for one, and this day and night. During the halts the horse pastured, the travelers of the kibitka ate in company with the faithful Serko. The kibitka was provisioned for at least twenty persons, and Nicholas had generously placed the reserved food at the disposal of his two guests, whom he believed to be brother and sister.

On the 22d of August the kibitka reached the town of Atchinsk, which was 380 versts from Tomsk. A hundred and twenty versts still separated it from Krasnoiarsk. No incident had marked this journey. During the six days they had been together Nicholas, Michael Strogoff and Nadia had remained just the same, the one in his unalterable calmness, the other two anxious and looking forward to the moment when their companion would separate from them.

On the evening of the 25th of August the kibitka was only half a verst from Krasnoiarsk. One could see on the right and left the numerous wooden crosses which are erected along the road at the approaches to the town. It was 7 o'clock at night.

The kibitka had stopped.

"Where are we, sister?" asked Michael Strogoff.

"Has the town, then, gone to sleep? No noise strikes upon my ear."

Ten minutes afterward the kibitka entered the principal street.

Krasnoiarsk was deserted! There was not any longer an Athenian in this "Athens of the North," as it is called by Mme. de Bourboulon. Not one of those equipages, so splendidly rigged out, rattled along the handsome wide streets. Not a foot passenger trod the sidewalks that skirted those magnificent houses of wood, palatial in their grandeur!

Michael Strogoff, Nadia and Nicholas had not to search long for a place in which to rest. The first house of which they tried the door was empty, as were all the rest. They found nothing there but a heap of leaves. For want of something better, the horse had to be content with this meager food. As for the provisions of the kibitka, they were not exhausted, and each one took his share. Then, after having knelt before a modest picture of the Panaghia that was hanging on the wall and which the last flame of a lamp still lit up, Nicholas and the young girl fell asleep, while Michael Strogoff remained awake, his anxiety driving away all sleep.

The next day, 26th of August, before daybreak the kibitka was traversing the park of birch trees to reach the banks of the Yenisei, which was crossed by the little party on an improvised raft.

Michael Strogoff could at length believe that the route was free as far as Irkutsk. He had outstripped the Tartars, and when the soldiers of the emir should arrive at Krasnoiarsk they would only find an abandoned town there and no means of immediate communication between the two banks of the Yenisei; hence a delay of some days until a bridge of boats, difficult to construct, should open a passage to them.

For the first time since the unlucky meeting with Ivan Ogareff at Omsk the courier of the czar felt himself less uneasy and could hope that no new obstacle would arise to the accomplishment of his plans.

The kibitka, after having proceeded about fifteen versts toward the southeast, came to and retook the long highroad across the steppe.

On the 28th of August the travelers had passed the town of Balaisk, which was eighty versts from Krasnoiarsk, and by the 29th that of Ribinsk, forty versts from Balaisk.

The next day, after traveling more than thirty-five versts, they arrived at Kamsk, a more considerable town, watered by the river of the same name, a small affluent of the Yenisei, which descends from the mountains of Sayansk.

On going out from Kamsk Michael informed Nadia and Nicholas that they would find only one little town of some importance, Nijni Oudinsk, before Irkutsk. Nicholas answered that he knew that there was a telegraphic station in that town. Therefore if Nijni Oudinsk had been abandoned like Kamsk he would certainly be obliged to seek for some occupation in the capital of eastern Siberia.

From Kamsk to the neighboring town was very long, about a hundred and thirty versts.

After having crossed the little river of Birousa the kibitka reached Birousinsk on the morning of the 4th of September. There, very fortunately, Nicholas, who saw his provisions becoming exhausted, found in an abandoned bakehouse a dozen cakes, prepared with mutton fat, and a large supply of boiled rice.

After a reasonable halt they continued their journey once more on the afternoon of the 8th of September. The distance to Irkutsk was not more than 500 versts. Nothing in their rear signaled the advance guard of the Tartars. Michael Strogoff had therefore settled down to think that his journey would not again be interrupted and that in eight days or in ten at the most he would be in the presence of the grand duke.

"Ah!" said Nicholas.

"What is the matter, friend?" asked Michael Strogoff eagerly, as a blind man whom the least noise held on the watch.

"Did you not see?" said Nicholas, whose smiling face suddenly became cloudy.

Then he added:

"Ah, no, you could not see, and it is happy for you, good father!"

"But I have seen nothing," said Nadia.

"So much the better! So much the better! But I—I have seen!"

"What was it, then?" asked Michael Strogoff.

Michael Strogoff understood the hesitation of his companion, although he did not share his credulity regarding hares crossing the path, and he wished to reassure him.

"We have nothing to fear, friend," he said to him.

"Nothing for you nor for her, I know, good father," answered Nicholas, "but for me!"

And, continuing, said he:

"It is my destiny."

Meanwhile, in spite of the sad prognostications, the day passed by without any accident.

Next day, Sept. 9, at noon the kibitka halted at the town of Alsalevsk, as deserted as was the surrounding country.

There on the threshold of a house Nadia found two of those knives with long, sharp blades used by Siberian hunters. She gave one of them to Michael Strogoff, who hid it under his coat, and she kept the other for herself. The kibitka was not more than sixty-five versts from Nijni Oudinsk.

Nicholas during the last two days had not been able to regain his usual good humor. The evil omen had affected him more than one could have believed, and he who up to that time had never remained an hour without talking had now long spells of silence, from which even Nadia could with difficulty withdraw him.

In spite of all his somewhat fatalistic resignation he would not believe himself safe except within the walls of Irkutsk. Many Russians would have thought like Nicholas, and more than one, pulling the bridle of his horse, would have turned back after seeing a hare cross their path.

The next day, toward 4 o'clock in the afternoon, Nicholas descried on the horizon the high belfries of the churches of Nijni Oudinsk. They were crowned with thick columns of vapor which could not be clouds.

Nicholas and Nadia looked and communicated to Michael Strogoff the result of their observations. They must decide their course of action at once. If the town had been abandoned, they could pass through it without any risk, but if by a movement that they could not explain the Tartars already occupied it they must turn it at any price.

"Let us advance prudently," said Michael Strogoff, "but let us advance!"

Another verst was made.

He was about to propose to Nicholas to leave the route and in case of necessity only to regain it after having turned Nijni Oudinsk, when the sound of a gun was heard on the right. A ball hissed, and the horse in the kibitka, struck in the head, fell dead.

At the same instant, a dozen horsemen threw themselves on the road, and the kibitka was surrounded. Michael Strogoff, Nadia and Nicholas, without having had time to recover themselves, were prisoners and being led rapidly toward Nijni Oudinsk.

The next day, 11th of September, the detachment passed through the town of Chibarlinskoe.

At that time an incident occurred which was to have very serious consequences.

The night had come. The Tartar horsemen, having had a halt, were more or less drunk. They were about to continue their journey.

Nadia, who up to that time, as though by a miracle, had been respected by those soldiers, was insulted by one of them.

Michael Strogoff had been able to see neither the insult nor the insulting person, but Nicholas had seen for him.

Then quietly, without having reflected, without perhaps having any consciousness of his action, Nicholas made straight for the soldier, and before the latter could make any movement to stop him, snatching a pistol from the pommel of his saddle, he discharged it full at his breast.

The officer who had command of the detachment ran up immediately at the sound of the pistol.

The horsemen were about to cut Nicholas in pieces, but at a sign from the officer they bound him fast with cords, they flung him across a horse, and the detachment set off at a gallop.

The cord which tied Michael Strogoff, gnawed by him, broke at an unexpected dash of the horse, and its rider, half drunk, carried away in a quick run, did not even perceive it.

Repairing Neatly Done

Never thought of such a sign for a medicine did you? Well, it's a good sign for Scott's Emulsion. The body has to be repaired like other things and Scott's Emulsion is the medicine that does it.

These poor bodies wear out from worry, from over-work, from disease. They get thin and weak. Some of the new ones are not well made—and all of the old ones are racked from long usage.

Scott's Emulsion fixes all kinds. It does the work both inside and out. It makes soft bones hard, thin blood red, weak lungs strong, hollow places full. Only the best materials are used in the patching and the patches don't show through the new glow of health.

No one has to wait his turn. You can do it yourself—you and the bottle.

This picture represents the Trade Mark of Scott's Emulsion and is on the wrapper of every bottle.

THE AMERICAN FLAG.

As It Appeared Long Before Betsy Ross Made One.

Few persons have noticed the interesting evolution on our flag of the stripes and stars as depicted in the armory of the Ancients at the top of old Faneuil hall. Most persons are familiar with the story of Mrs. Ross and the making of the first flag of the free. But evidently it was not Mrs. Ross who originated the idea of the stripes.

Down in the armory of the Ancients you will see first the broad red flag with the old English cross in its field. Next a very similar flag, except that the broad red becomes blue, with no red but in the cross itself on the white field. Next the white flag, with its pine tree and "Appeal to Heaven," whence came our own state banner. Then it would appear that the fathers went back again, for the next flag has the red and white longitudinal stripes, but in the field there are the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew worked out in red upon a white ground. The next flag restores the blue to the field. It, too, has the longitudinal red and white stripes and the combined crosses of St. George and St. Andrew, as in the British jack, worked out in red and white upon a blue field. It was not till after that, upon the assertion of independence by the colonies, that Mrs. Ross's flag appeared, and apparently she only substituted for the double crosses the circle of thirteen stars upon the blue field.

The red, white and blue and the red and white stripes were all in the flag generations before Mrs. Ross was born, as the collection of the Ancients demonstrates.—Boston Journal.

The Hand In Health.

Let us shake hands with a man, and we will tell you something about his health. The firm, hearty handshake of a sincere man may be rather rough, so that one is taught he has a grip, but it indicates stamina. While denoting absence of tact and refinement, it points to physical strength. The flabby hand that returns no pressure belongs to the person who has no great strength of body or mind. The quick, nervous handshake of an excitable, nervous temperament, and its opposite, the nerveless, passive one, belong to persons in ill health. The hand that threatens to collapse or give means fear. The feel of the hand called magnetic indicates health and kindness and a desire to help others. In many ways we may decide character by the hand as well as by the brain.—London Doctor.

Affinity Between Horses.

When the Duke of Wellington was fighting in Spain, there were two horses which had always drawn the same gun, side by side, in many battles. At last one was killed, and the other, on having his food brought as usual, refused to eat, but turned his head around to look for his old friend, and neighed many times as if to call him. All care was in vain. There were other horses near him, but he would not notice them, and he soon afterward died, not having once tasted food since his former companion was killed.—Our Dumb Animals.

His Reward.

"You remember Bingley, who bought a house on each side of his own dwelling so he could choose his own neighbors?"

"Yes. What of him?"

"Well, he fitted up those houses elegantly and rented them to first class tenants, and they won't associate with him at all because he's merely a landlord."—Chicago Tribune.

Bulgarian Brigands.

The Balkan mountains have been the homes and haunts of many brigands through centuries of Bulgarian history. In the sixteenth century a national movement against the oppression of Turkey fell into the hands of brigand chiefs. They were known by the name of Haidutin. They were represented as friends of the poor, the protectors of the weak, the allies of Christians and the foes of the Mohammedans. In legends and in songs their names and fame were perpetuated. They increased from the ranks of the avengers and the worthless. Once identified with them a brigand's safety consisted in continuing with them. The Turks blocked the way to return to the ranks of common citizenship. Villagers often welcomed them as deliverers from their oppressors.—Leslie's Weekly.

Badly Hurt

As Thomas Marks was returning to his home Tuesday afternoon he caught his foot in a hole in the sidewalk in front of John McIntyre's residence on Ottawa street and was thrown to the ground in such a manner as to break the tendons in the knee letting the muscles loose from the bone. Mr. Marks will be laid up for some time.

If the village council does not do something to compel property owners to repair defective walks several damage suits will be brought against the village very soon. Several walks on Chicago street are in a very bad condition as there are about the Detroit Southern station and in other parts of town. For several years it has been a mere matter of "bluff" this fixing of old side walks and now they should be repaired or something done in earnest.

Should be Exempt.

While not having given the matter thorough consideration, The Telegram at this stage of the game believes that the city bonds should be exempted at least from local taxation. The Telegram from the present consideration of the case, would suggest that the matter of securing an amendment to the city charter exempting the city bonds from taxation, should be considered by the council. As to the feasibility of this move the Telegram is not posted, but would be pleased to hear from some of those who have investigated the subject. If the bonds were not subject to taxation they could be placed with a rush at three per cent. or possibly even less. Let the matter be given consideration. —Adrian Telegram.

Again Adrian desires to escape taxes. In fact the time will soon come when Adrian will ask to be exempt from taxes on any of her real estate and as a mattee of fact she pays state and county taxes only on about half of her real estate at the present time. Such exemptions assist to burden all the rest of the county and there should be some law to stop them.

Referred to Business Men.

The council had a six-hour session Monday evening, much of the time being spent in considering franchises for electric railways. Mr. Hatch, of Detroit, was present in the interest of the Detroit, Ann Arbor & Adrian road. The ordinance has twenty-two sections and that one providing for cars carrying freight was stricken out.

A meeting of the Business Men's Association is called for Thursday evening and the council deems it best to refer the matter to that body, and get the opinion of a large number of taxpayers. —Adrian Telegram.

It seems that the matter of the electric road running from Ann Arbor to Adrian through Tecumseh is being revived again and this time the company will no doubt get the desired franchise in Adrian. It is hoped that work on the line will be commenced in the spring.

PHOTO POINTERS

Notes of Interest to all Persons Photographically Inclined and

TO BE READ

Or Not as Desired.

THE CAMERA USED IN ENGLISH SCHOOLS.

A writer in the Photo-Era tells an interesting story of how valuable the camera is in teaching English. In a school which is on the borderland between city and country, most of the pupils in the ninth grade have been provided with cameras. One of the popular things is to go on a walk at noon of a mile or so. The schoolhouse is on the bank of the river and one series of pictures shows the variety of sailing craft. Then some of the pupils will describe the different types of vessels, where they came from and where going. Getting interested in seafaring, when a fishing shooner tied up at the dock the children caught various views of the cargo and crew, and they even read Kipling's "Captain Courageous."

The streets, too, afford endless pictures and instruction. A pupil who visited New York city showed a picture of a horse car—something many of the others had never seen. A wharf was being built some distance away, and a trolley ride of a Saturday afternoon gave the children not only a fine outing, but lots of information was gathered concerning the way such work was done and the material necessary. Near the school is a brook which comes tumbling down a steep hillside, and this furnished subjects both picturesque and geographical.

The developing is done in the basement of the school in the evening, by permission of the janitor, when there is plenty of air and no screens necessary for the windows. Here comes in a lesson in the use of chemicals. After being developed and fixed, the negatives are left in the running water all night and dried the next day, the printing being done at the convenience of the pupils.

"The results are a great improvement in English work," says the writer, due to increased interest, and a greatly incresed quickness of perception."

TO AVOID PYRO SPOTS ON THE HANDS.

Wash the hands in diluted solution of citric acid and when dry put them in clear glycerine. Under this treatment, the pyro will have no effect on the hands.

WOULDN'T HAVE THAT KIND.

A daughter of Erin entered S. P. Gilbert's studio one day last week and wanted her picture taken to "sind to the lad in the ould country." She was somewhat fearful of the modus operandi and thinking to calm her fears, Mr. Gilbert sat in front of the camera and told his customer that she might look through it. She did so. Of course his image was reversed to her vision. She gave one look, and there followed a shriek which would make a Sioux chief envious, and said: "Phat did ye mane, ye spalpeen? Did ye think I want to sind me lad a picture of me standing on me head. More shame to ye. I'll have none of it." Nor could her ire be appeased, and she left the studio.

SYMPATHETIC PICTURES.

Sympathetic pictures are pictures which are invisible on a piece of white paper, but become visible as soon as they are immersed in water and invisible again as the paper gets dry. The process by which they can be made is the following:

Procure a good quality of paper (photographic plain paper) and remove all the gelatine or starch which it may hold in its fibres by muriatic acid. Wash and dry.

Now prepare a solution of gelatine four parts, water one hundred parts and let the paper absorb as much of it as it can hold. Hang up and when dry sensitize it by floating it for three to four minutes on a solution of four parts of bichromate of potassium and one hundred parts of water. It is ready for printing now. The printing is done in the usual way until a brown picture is distinctly visible. The print is washed now, until all traces of bichromate are removed, and finally treated with hot water to remove all traces of gelatine. A faint impression may be visible yet, but this is easily obliterated by a solution of sulphite of soda to which a few drops of sulphuric acid are added (or sulphurous acid will take it out). When dry now, there is no trace of a picture visible, but it will appear as soon as the paper is wetted.

A BIT OF HUMAN NATURE.

Practical photographers are aware that sitters seldom like their own pictures. "All yours are good, but mine are not right," is the common criticism. Perhaps the objecter expected too much. Fanny says, "Kate! yours is fine, but look at my nose." Kate says, "Yours is exact, but I am going to make him take mine over. I would'nt show that to anybody."

PHOTOGRAPHING THE BABY.

One of our grouty amateurs, who has unsuccessfully tried to get a picture of the "little dear" gives the following receipt as the only sure way to get a good picture of the baby:

"Procure six six-inch wire nails, six ounces chloroform, one handkerchief. Saturate the handkerchief with the chloroform and press over the nose and mouth of the baby till perfectly quiet. Then drive nails through each ear, hands and feet into a board large enough for a background. Use hammer to parents if necessary."

SWEETEN THE DEVELOPER.

By the addition of sugar to a developer, it will work much slower. About twenty per cent of sugar will retard the development for a time, and give the manipulator opportunity to see what he is doing when he has an over-exposed plate.

A SOCIETY EVENT

Was the Wedding Wednesday Evening of

HARRY E. FEE
MISS HARRIET N. KIMBALL

At Adrian. The Ceremony Followed by a Brilliant Reception.

Miss Harriet N. Kimball, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Kimball was married Wednesday evening to Harry A. Fee, both of Adrian and the event proved to be one of the most delightful of the season for Lenawee county.

The bride was gowned in a beautiful white luster French crepe du chene, eu train, made over white taffeta silk. The bodice being trimmed with white medallions of white lace and white ribbon put together with embroidery of white silk. The skirt was tucked. The soft material making a most attractive costume. She carried a shower boquet of lillies of the valley, and the groom wore a boutonniere of the same fragrant blossoms.

The bride and groom are both well known in the city. The bride is one of Adrian's fairest daughters. She has many friends, won by her kindness of heart and pleasant disposition. The groom is one of the popular young business men of the city. Their many friends extend congratulations and wish for them a life of happiness and prosperity. Among the guests were Mrs. L. P. Tribou and Lucius Lilley, of Tecumseh.

Niles, Mich., Jan. 21.—(Special)—This afternoon the little 2-year-old daughter of Justin Camp was playing with an old tin dipper having a ragged edge, and in some unaccountable way the index finger of the child's left hand was completely amputated by the utensil. Even the bone was cut off slick and clean. The accident was most peculiar.—Detroit Free Press.

The little girl is the grand-daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Daaidson, of Tecumseh. It cannot be imagined how such an accident could happen, but advice by letter reveals the fact that the little one is now getting along nicely.

Choice of routes via Omaha or St. Paul.

For further information apply to any coupon ticket agent in the United States or Canada or address Robt. C. Jones, Michigan Passenger Agent, 32 Campus Martius, Detroit, Mich.

Marks Bros.

Gave a first class entertainment to a crowded house at Sutton's opera house last evening and will fill the house again this and to-morrow evening. There are two good reasons why Marks Brothers always crowd the audience room at Tecumseh. The show is always good. The entertainment is always clean, anyone can go and be sure to be amused and not annoyed.

Mumps

Seem to prevail amongst the society young men of Tecumseh. Among the sick ones at present time are Fay Anderson and John Gaston. The young gentlemen are doing nicely but very much "swelled up" and annoyed.

ATTITUDE OF LIBERALS.

New York, Jan. 23.—Gen. Modesto Garces, second in command of the Colombian insurgent forces, said with reference to the attitude of his party on the canal question:

"The liberal party in Colombia is anxious that the United States shall own, manage and control the Panama canal, and, if in power, will enact a new constitution granting the United States land requisite for the canal. It shall concede better terms than exist as to annual payments due the Colombian government on account of its previous contract with the French canal company. If successful in establishing a government the liberal party will be in a position to treat officially with the United States regarding all canal matters.

"The situation in Colombia," he continues, "is this: The liberal armies located at different points throughout the interior of Colombia number more than 20,000 men under efficient generals. All are volunteers, serving without pay and have met with most encouraging success in capturing strategic points. When these armies are increased in strength by the receipt of arms and ammunition already shipped to them, we believe the Colombian government will be forced to capitulate or amend its constitution to conform with the clear-cut modern ideas which the liberal party is fighting for, and particularly relating to the matter of the Panama canal."

EARTHQUAKE SUFFERERS.

Money Being Raised for Them—Many Reported Insane.

Mexico City, Jan. 23.—Subscriptions are being taken up here among American and British residents for the victims of the earthquake at Chilpancingo. Further details of the casualties report that three women were crushed to death in the church at Chilapa, while they were engaged in their devotions. One woman at the first tremor ran to the door, hoping to escape, but was caught beneath the church tower as it fell. Fortunately a large portion of the population were in the main plaza at the time of the shock, watching a tight rope performance. Advices from Chilpancingo report that Gov. Mora and family are living in a stable, which has been converted into a temporary dwelling. He offers $30,000 as a personal contribution for rebuilding the city. Many people are reported to have gone insane as a result of the horrors of the catastrophe and from the loss of relatives and friends. It is now proposed to rebuild the city on another site.

The Presbyterian missionaries, George Johnson and Walter H. Semple, both of Philadelphia, whose headquarters are at Chilpancingo, fortunately were away at the time of the disaster.

SHOT HIS OWN BROTHER.

Act Was Done When Victim's Back Was Turned.

Chicago, Jan. 23.—Robert McFetridge, a wealthy ice dealer, was shot and mortally wounded last night by his brother, William McFetridge. For a long time there has been bad blood between the brothers over business matters. While Robert was on his way home, carrying in his arms his two-year-old niece, William came up from behind and shot him in the back. Badly wounded as he was, Robert's chief care was to protect the little girl. He tried to put her in a place of safety and as he ran his brother followed, shooting him twice again. William was arrested after a short search by the police.

IN OLDEN TIMES

Many Things were Different Now adays the Public Profit by Experience

When the striped pole or sign which now indicates a barber shop was employed to let the public know where cupping or blood letting was professionally performed, close shaves were of daily occurrence not the easy removal of the hirsute or hairy adornment of the head and face, but close shaves from eternity. More than one unfortunate entered the barber surgeon's doorway to leave it a corpse or so weak that weeks were required to get the victim of malpractice on his feet. Blood-letting was used for everything from a heartache to a corn and a pain in the loins was invariably treated with two incisions, one on each side of the spine. Like plasters and liniments, these helped from the counter irritation they created, and we may presume that had Mr. Calvin Wilson, proprietor of the leading shaving parlor of Niles, Mich., lived in the time of George III, of England, in place of taking the course he did a short time ago with his back, blood-letting would have been resorted to. Read how he treated his trouble:

Mr. Wilson says: "My occupation has very likely much to do with the cause of my backache from which I have suffered considerably for a number of years. Standing on one's feet some days 18 hours is hard on the best backs, but when you have pain across the loins with lameness and soreness, everytime you move the muscles of the arm, long before your daily task is over you often wish you could go to sleep. I tried everything to better my condition but was unsuccessful until I used three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. The relief they brought to a man who has worked hard all his life and is now past three score and ten is much easier to appreciate than to describe in words. Doan's Kidney Pills perform what they promise."

That it is possible to have too good an appetite seems to be one of the morals of a story told by a friend to the Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"I am very fond of roasted ears of corn," said he, "and I eat it whenever I can get it. Some time ago, while I was in a restaurant in Texas, the waiter put a plateful on the table, and I just helped myself.

"When I had consumed the third, I noticed that a man across the table was eying me most curiously. I looked at him and told him that I considered roasted corn one of the most nutritious and palatable things a man could eat. Then I helped myself to a fourth ear and devoured it with relish.

"When I reached my hand into the dish for the fifth, the fellow across the table couldn't stand it any longer.

"'Say, pard,' said he, 'don't you think you could save about a dollar and a quarter a day if you was to board at a livery stable?'"

Fortifying a Lighthouse.

A lighthouse at the south cape of Cormosa was built in a part of the island inhabited solely by savages and had, in consequense, to be fortified. The lantern was protected by steel revolving screens, and on the gallery of the tower, which was of cast iron, a machine gun was mounted on racers.

Round the base of the tower was built a wrought iron refuge, or fort, communicating by bullet proof passages with all the rooms in the keepers' dwelling houses.

Both fort and tower were fitted with suitable accommodation for the staff in a case of siege, had water tanks in the basement and were supplied with a stock of provisions.

The station was further protected by a loophole wall and a dry ditch, flanked by two small towers, or caponnieres, armed with eighteen pounder cannon.—Engineering.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. A REVELATION

Take away sound refreshing sleep and you rob nature of its most necessary requirment. Feeding and building up time, that's why so many people find their standard of strength wanting when they cannot sleep well, one symptom after another creeps in and serious ailments follow that is what makes so many people look older than they are. The perfecting of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Pills is a revelation to this kind.

Mrs. E. Anderson, of Tecumseh, Mich., says: "I was so nervous that I could not sleep at night and was quite dizzy. I got a box of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Pills at Chas. A. Wright's drug store and now since using the pills I can say my nerves are steadied, I rest better and the dizziness is relieved. I think the pills a splendid nerve medicine." Dr. A. W. Short of Experience.

Herbert Gladstone while yet a single man was addressing a woman's suffrage meeting in Leeds one afternoon, and he paid a graceful compliment to the eloquence of the ladies who had addressed the meeting. He gallantly remarked on the great pleasure which it gives the other sex to listen to women talking.

Pausing for a moment after this observation, Mr. Gladstone, like his audience, was thrown into an unexpected state of merriment by a male voice which proceeded from the back of the hall and proclaimed in the broadest Yorkshire dialect, "Eh, lad, thou'rt noan wed yet, I see'st!"—London Truth.

London Street Names.

Peerless street, in London, is a corruption of Perilous pool. Golden square was originally Gelding square, and the name was changed at the wish of the inhabitants. Fetter lane has nothing to do with fetters, but only with fewtors (idle fellows), who once loafed in the neighborhood. Gutter lane, in the city, is really Gutheron's lane. Duck's Foot lane, near Cannon street, should be Duke's Foot lane, being so named after the Dukes of Suffolk. Cannon street had nothing to do with guns, but everything with candles, which were made in it when it passed as Candlewick street.

How Parchment Came to Be Used.

When the literary jealousy of the Egyptians caused them to stop the supply of papyrus, the king of Pergamos, a city in Asia Minor, introduced the use of sheepskin in a form called, from the place of its invention, pergamona, whence our word parchment is believed to be derived. Vellum, a finer article, made from calfskin, was also used. Many of the books done on vellum in the middle ages were transcribed by monks, and often it took years to complete a single copy.

No Danger.

Coal Merchant—I say, Premium, I want to insure my coalyard against fire. What's the cost of a policy for £1,000?

Insurance Agent—What coal is it? Same kind you sent me last?

Merchant—Yes, it is.

Agent—Oh, I wouldn't insure it if I were you. It won't burn!—London Answers.

Elevating.

Northern Colored Man—But you ought to be a lawyer or doctor or something high. Isn't there some way in which you can rise above the cornfield?

Southern Colored Man—Yas, sah; dah's many ways. Dah might be a hurricane, or dis mule might lif' me wid his heels.—Philadelphia Record.

Wind and Temper.

There is a closer connection between wind and temper than at first sight appears. A coldish wind has a bracing effect and on the whole is beneficial. In countries where hot winds occur periodically, on the other hand, these are regarded as a nuisance, if not a curse. Every one almost gets cross, weary and done up and has a headache daily.

In Egypt the season when crimes are commonest is when the hot khamseen blows. Nearly always during a severe sirocco the Arabs in Algeria were restless, if they did not attempt an actual rising. The solano, which now and then rushes across the Mediterranean in fiery blasts from Africa, upsets every one in Spain and is the worst wind in that country.

And even in the "Pearl of the Antilles" the fierce hot wind is such a pest that it is recorded of a family living in Havana that they made it a rule in the household to preserve absolute silence until the wind disappeared. It was the only plan they could think of to avoid family quarrels.

Webster's Income.

The legal profession of the present day will be surprised to learn that Mr. Webster, the greatest American lawyer of his time, made but $15,000 a year by his practice. But the fees of counsel between 1840 and 1850 were not what they have been since.

In 1848 I accompanied a client to Mr. Webster's office in Boston and asked him to name a retaining fee in an important patent case. He said he thought a couple of hundred dollars would do. When the case was tried, his fee was only $1,000. On another occasion I paid him a retaining fee of $2,000 for the proprietors of the Goodyear india rubber patent.

His fee for arguing the great equity cause of Goodyear versus Day in the circuit court of the United States for the district of New Jersey, by which he established the validity of the Goodyear patent, was $5,000. This was in the spring of 1852, and was the last case he ever argued.

Foolhardy.

The question was once put to General Wheeler:

"General, what was the most foolhardy thing you ever saw on the field of battle?"

"I didn't see it on the field of battle," replied General Wheeler. "I saw it one day when a young woman tried to enter a revolving door leading a dog by a very long string. She passed through in safety, but not so the dog. The rushing public came along, and the dog was ground both ways and chopped up as though he were in a sausage machine. Each time he escaped his mistress tugged madly on the string and pulled him into it again. She got him through at last, being a very determined girl. The janitor of the building wrapped him up in a newspaper for her, so that she could carry him home. The way she clung to that string was the most foolhardy thing I ever saw."

The Baby's Name.

"Name this child," said the clergyman.

"Superfluous," replied young Mrs. Verdigris, the mother of the cherub.

"What?"

"Superfluous."

"My dear madam," said the preacher in a whisper, "that will never do. I can't give the baby such a name as that. What suggested it to you?"

"My husband's brother."

"Is he a married man?"

"No, sir. He's an old bachelor."

"As I suspected. Madam, we will call this baby 'Blessing.'"

"I've no objection, sir, but I like the sound of the other better."—Chicago Tribune.

Caste In India.

The barbers of India rank with the washerwomen. The son of a barber must be a barber all his life, and his wife must be a barber's daughter. The Hindoo shaver travels about in search of customers, and the barbering is done in the street. There are no stools, both barber and customer squatting on their heels while the operation is performed. The Hindoo barber is a manicure and a chiropodist as well, and his pay is wretchedly small. They often act as surgeons, and they make a specialty of piercing the ears of young girls for earrings, while barbers' wives are almost always hairdressers.

Like Shooting Ghosts.

The impression when hunting paddymelons, a species of kangaroo found in Australia, is of shooting at ghosts, what with the dim, mysterious light of the "bush" and the strange appearance and swift movement of the game. Paddymelons, like all the kangaroo tribe, are useless for food, except so far as their tails are concerned, which, being largely of glutinous texture, furnish material for capital soup, very like oxtail, but with a peculiar and agreeable gamy flavor.

Useful.

"Our church fair was a splendid success," said young Mrs. Torkins.

"Did you sell lots of things?"

"Yes."

"Anything useful?"

"Yes, indeed! Everything was ever so useful. I can't think of a single article that couldn't be saved up and donated to be sold at the next fair."—Washington Star.

There are scores of references in the Bible to the use of perfumes by the Hebrews both in their religious services and in private life.

Our Neighbor's Girl.

Parents of Children Can Learn Something Interesting Of Us.

If you have a boy or a girl you certainly want to see them thrive and develop into a healthy man or woman.

We can show you how you can give the little ones a tonic that will do them the greatest amount of good. We refer to VINOL, that we advocate so strongly in these days. This is the medicine we sell on a guarantee and are willing to refund the cost of it to anyone not satisfied with the way it acts.

VINOL is sold by the leading druggist in every large city. We are proud to say we are the representatives of VINOL in this town.

Here is a letter that will interest mothers and fathers:

"My little girl, four years old, has been taking VINOL with most excellent results. Before that she had no appetite or strength and was generally run down. She loved the taste of Vinol and it was not long before she began to improve in appetite and pick up in strength. She now is in excellent health. W. S. McCarty, Frazier St., Bangor, Maine."

DRUGGIST.

ZUNI INDIAN MAGIC.

A PERFORMANCE THAT PUZZLES ALL WHO WITNESS IT.

This Wonderful Feat Rivals the Famous Mango Growing Trick of the Hindoos—Scientists Are Unable to Solve the Mystery.

Nearly everybody has heard of and wondered at the mango growing trick of the Hindoo, by which he makes a seed sprout before the astonished eyes of the European and reach maturity in a very short time.

But few are aware that an equally amazing feat is regularly performed by the Zuni Indians on this continent. Their medicine men at the annual "corn festival" do a stunt of which no satisfactory explanation has ever been advanced. Scientists seeing it have been made, as a cowboy described it, to "look like 30 cents."

Preparation is made for this extraordinary Zuni performance by spreading a large square of clean, yellowish sand on the ground before the southern aperture of the medicine lodge. This sand is carefully smoothed and packed so as to present a firm, level surface.

Around the edges of the sand square are then drawn, by means of a ceremonial arrow, figures representing the Great Spirit, the earth, the sun, the sky and the rain. There are also the symbols for corn and for a bountiful harvest.

The indentations made by the arrow are then filled in with pigments, the clouds and sky with blue, the earth with black and the harvest with chrome yellow. The center of the square is left vacant. When completed, this sand painting is a fine specimen of barbaric art and is far from displeasing to a civilized eye.

When the hour arrives, the officiating medicine man takes his seat in the opening of the lodge facing the sand square. On his right and left, extending out around the square, the chiefs and warriors range themselves according to rank. When all are in position, the medicine man fills the ceremonial pipe with tobacco, lights it and blows one puff of smoke to the east, one to the west, one to the north, one to the south and two to the heavens. He then addresses those assembled, recounting the religious history of the tribe, its wanderings and famine and the benevolence of the Great Spirit in the past. He closes with a prayer for the continuance of fatherly care.

Then he takes a grain of corn from the medicine bag at his waist, thrusts the sacred arrow into the center of the sand square, withdraws it, drops the grain into the opening and carefully smooths down the sand. Resuming his seat, all the assembled chiefs light their pipes and smoke in silence.

If the Great Spirit condescends to answer the prayer of the medicine man, as generally happens, the grain of corn will sprout and send forth a shoot.

After an interval of fifteen or twenty minutes the sand seems disturbed at the spot where the corn was buried. Soon slender light green blades of sprouting corn appear above the surface. The plant rises naturally and rapidly during the day.

By the next sunrise the silk and tassel appear. By noon the ear and stalk have reached full maturity.

Then ripening begins. Finally the blades and husks turn yellow and rattle when they are shaken by the wind. All this, mind you, has been done in thirty-six hours.

On the morning of the second day the corn growing is complete. The medicine man now addresses the watchers, who in company have "watched" the plant grow, for it is never left alone. With appropriate ceremonies he symbolizes the harvest by stripping the ear of its husks.

The corn he places in the medicine bag for future ceremonies, while the stalk is pulled up by the roots and hung over the door of the lodge. The long vigil of the watchers is now ended, and they seek much needed rest and food in order to be ready for the rain dance on the following day.

Every white man witnessing one of these ceremonies is deeply mystified. Above all, he is filled with admiration for the old medicine man. So natural and mysterious has been the process that the spectator feels at times disposed to believe in the presence of some supernatural power.

Yet every sane person knows that this performance has nothing unnatural about it. No white man, however, has discovered the secret. The absence of stage paraphernalia and the crude mechanical knowledge of the Zunis add to the mystery of the whole thing.

Various theories have been advanced in explanation. One is that some shrewd old medicine man discovered by accident some peculiar natural chemical that has the power of forcing the growth of a grain of corn and that this secret has been handed down from one generation of priests to another.

Another favorite explanation is that by great skill the medicine man is able to hypnotize the entire circle of spectators and so produce the result without apparatus of any kind save a yellow stalk of corn from the last harvest.

But nobody knows exactly.—New York Times.

Plays It Only Once.

"Yes," admitted the man who had "backed" a show, "and some of them he plays many times, but there's one he never duplicates. He never plays 'angel' but once, for no fellow has the money to repeat it."—Chicago Post.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

The sun is traveling at forty miles a second, about 40,000 times as fast as an express train.

The shadow of the moon which falls on the earth during an eclipse of the sun is usually about fifty miles in diameter.

The moon enjoys 354½ hours of sunlight at a time and then an equal amount of darkness, making her day equal to 29.53 of our day.

It is a law of science that sound cannot travel through a vacuum. The sound waves require the atmospheric conditions for their vibration.

Stars seem to rise and set, like the sun, on account of the earth's revolution on her axis. They seem to rise four minutes earlier every night, on account of the earth's revolution in her orbit.

In a Fog.

A befogged individual was groping his way down one of London's side streets leading off the Strand when he suddenly bumped up against a man coming from the opposite direction.

"Could you tell me where this street leads to?" he inquired after the necessary apologies had been made.

"Certainly," replied the other. "It leads into the river. I have just come out of it"—Free Lance.

Heart Disease

retards the circulation, weakens the stomach, deranges digestion, pollutes the blood, destroys the nervous force and saps the vitality of the whole system. It causes pains in the side, palpitation, shortness of breath, smothering, dropsical swellings, sinking spells, and frequently ends all suffering in sudden death. Why tempt death when a cure is within easy reach?

"My head would get so hot it seemed to be burning up, while my feet were like ice. My limbs would swell and get numb. I had to sit in a chair day and night for months and my heart throbbed and pained me terribly. After using three bottles of Dr. Miles' Heart Cure I could do a good days work."

KID-NE-OIDS CURED HIS SUFFERING.

Have been afflicted with kidney and bladder diseases for the past three years, being chronic from the start, was in much pain and forced to stop work. For the past four months I have faithfully tried several of the so-called "guarantee cures" but without any benefit. I finally concluded to try Kid-Ne-Oids and began to feel better immediately after using them. I continued using them and am now permanently cured. I make this statement of my own volition and will make oath to it if necessary.—Geo. S. Estell, Kansas City, Mo.

THE TOUCH DOES IT

Benson's Plasters are like your other friends—they hate to see you in pain or in weakness and are dog-tired hearing you complain about it. They want to cure you and send you along to your business—whole and happy. They can do it and will do it. Try them on. What for? Why for any cough or cold you may be troubled with, or any bothering pain or ache, or worry with kidneys or liver. Possibly some old clutch of muscular rheumatism renders an arm or a leg worth only half price just now. For anything that makes the machine work slow and stiff, with pain maybe in the motion of it, clap a Benson's Porous Plaster squarely on the bad spot. They are the get-out-to-morrow plasters—not the sort that go to sleep on your skin like a cat on a cushion. There is comfort and speedy relief in the touch of them. No other external remedy, no matter how made or how called, is worthy to live in the same street with Benson's Plasters. Pains and ailments melt away under them as a sheet of ice does under the Spring sun. You cannot foretell the weather but you can always foretell the effect of Benson's Plasters; it is as sure as the effect of a hot breakfast in a hungry man's stomach. But look out for substitutes. Get the genuine. All druggists, or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on receipt of 25c. each.

It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest, and cures the patient. Try one bottle. BRADLEY TALKED Bay City's Ex-Congressman Discussed Sugar Tariff.

HE SPRUNG A SUPRISE

Produced a Telegram from Detroit, Stating Parties Were Now in Cuba Hustling for Cane-Producing Lands —Also Jabbed Republicans a Bit.

Washington, Jan. 25.—Former Congressman N. B. Bradley of Bay City, Mich., was one of a dozen speakers before the ways and means committee yesterday against the reduction of the tariff on Cuban sugar, and in the course of his remarks startled the sugar trust's agents by producing a telegram he received a few days ago from the chairman of the chamber of commerce, Detroit. The telegram read:

"Oscar Stillman has left for Cuba. Sent by Havemeyer with orders to buy or get under option all lands available for cane raising. Gentlemen here can testify positively to that effect."

Rep. Richardson, leader of the democratic minority, asked to see the telegram. He read it carefully, as did the other members of the committee, and a buzz of excitement went around the room as the spectators discussed its effects upon the committee. Bradley put a few political digs into the ribs of the republican party, slyly intimating that the blow struck at the farmers by the republican administration would not be forgotten by them when voting time came around.

The impression of conservative persons who have attended all of the hearings before the committee was not changed at the close of last night's hearings. The situation remains as it has been, which, when the expressions of senators are considered and the conflicting statements of some speakers against reduction taken into account, can be summed up by saying it is still a toss up.

CHINESE WOULD REORGANIZE.

Pekin, Jan. 25.—The dowager empress and her councillors are seriously discussing the engagement of foreign advisors to reorganize the government. Yuan-Shi-Kai, viceroy of Pe-Chi-Li, is the inspiration of the movement. He will return to Pao-Ting-Fu today, having devoted several days to impressing upon the court the importance of real reforms and urging the adoption of foreign methods as being the only practical measures. He memoralized the throne, recommending the employment of eight foreigners of eminence in various branches of governmental science, attaching them to different boards.

Yuan-Shi-Kai and his followers are hopeful of practical results. They are taking Japan as their model. Any attempt to institute a parliament of any sort would, however, meet with tremendous opposition from the Manchus. While the employment of foreign advisers is no new idea with the Chinese, in only one exceptional instance has it produced lasting results, because inferior men were often engaged to advise and were usually only half-heartedly followed. Yuan-Shi-Kai proposes to secure men of unquestioned abilities and clothe them with some real authority. If the court adopts the plan its outcome will be watched with interested skepticism, and lobbying by the powers for representation among the councillors will probably begin.

Prince Ching, president of the new Chinese foreign office, desires that his eldest son should represent China at the coronation of King Edward, and his appointment as the Chinese special envoy is expected.

A New Society.

Washington, Jan. 25.—"The Crown Society of America," an organization whose announced aim is to promote culture and refinement and to add to the prestige of American men and women, has been incorporated here. The incorporators are Louise H. Patterson, Flora Adams Darling, Caroline V. English and Rida B. Haskell. The objects are stated to be to promote science and education, to transact any business pertinent to an academy of science, hold meetings, publish and distribute documents, conduct lectures, conduct, endow or assist in investigations in any department of science; maintain a library, and to unite men and women into one order, under the principles of the golden rule.

Smuggling Scheme Broken Up.

Washington, Jan. 25.—The postoffice department has been advised officially that the smuggling scheme by which furriers in Montreal, Canada, sent their goods concealed in buggies and otherwise across the border into Swanton and other Vermont points and there mailed the furs to points throughout the United States, has been completely broken up and the ringleader in the scheme driven out of business.

Alexander Willing to Abdicate.

Berne, Switzerland, Jan. 25.—Prince Peter Karageorgevitch left Geneva today to join his son George at St. Petersburg. Prince Peter's entourage openly say that his visit is in connection with the Prince George's succession to the throne of Servia in place of King Alexander, who is said to be willing to abdicate.

Wants the Tax Off Bankers.

Washington, Jan. 25.—Rep. H. C. Smith of Michigan has introduced a bill repealing paragraph 1 of section 2 of the war revenue act. The section which it is proposed to abolish is that imposing a tax of $50 upon bankers having a capital of not exceeding $25,000.

A Deep Mystery.

It is a mystery why women endure Backache, Headache, Nervousness Sleeplessness, Melancholy, Fainting and Dizzy Spells when thousands have proved that Electric Bitters will quickly cure such troubles. "I suffered for years with kidney trouble," writes Mrs. Phebe Cherley, of Peterson, Ia., "and a lame back pained me so I could not dress myself, but Electric Bitters wholly cured me, and although 73 years old, I now am able to do all my housework." It overcomes Constipation, improves appetite, gives perfect health. Only 50c at C. A. Wright's drug store.

WANT THEIR MONEY

Supreme Tent of Maccabes Start a Suit.

AGAINST PORT HURON BANK

Litigation Grows Out of the Defaulting Affair of Finance-Keeper Thompson—The Suit is an Action on a Promise.

Port Huron, Mich., Jan. 25.—The Port Huron Savings bank has been sued by Supreme Tent of Maccabees for $100,000. The declaration alleges that $300,000 passed through the bank's hands, and although the bank promised to pay the monies on demand, it has failed to keep its promise. The suit is an action on promise.

C. F. Harrington, cashier of the bank, stated that his bank was not a depository, but that C. D. Thompson, defaulting finance-keeper, while acting as teller of the Port Huron Savings bank, sent out bank drafts to sub-depositories instead of using Commercial bank drafts. The latter bank is a Maccabee depository here. Thompson then replaced Port Huron Savings bank drafts with Maccabee drafts, which was done without the bank's knowledge, and with which they had no connection.

P. H. Philips, who is Thompson's attorney in his trouble, appears as one of the attorneys for Supreme Tent in the suit against the bank. The suit is to recover $50,000, although twice that amount is named in the declaration. The payment of $7,000 by the Commercial and Savings bank of Flint to Supreme Tent is to be used as a leverage in the present suit.

Baird Retained.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Jan. 25.—Eli Sutton did not bring up the question of Athletic Director Baird's release at the board of regents meeting yesterday afternoon. It is generally understood that faculty influence was brought to bear on the grounds that any action taken by the regents just now might interfere with Baird's three-cornered row with Wisconsin and Chicago over football. Important improvements were agreed to and three splendid new buildings will be erected involving an outlay of $175,000, of which $25,000 is a memorial bequest.

Big Gypsum Combine.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Jan. 25.—The United States Gypsum Co., a giant gypsum combine involving 65 per cent of the mills in the country, has at last floated its capital of $10,000,000. Three Michigan plants are members: The Midland Plaster & Cement Co., Grand Rapids; Durr mills at Grandville, and the big plant at Alabaster, Mich., on Lake Huron. Paul A. English of Grand Rapids is general manager of operations. Sewell L. Avery of Detroit is manager of eastern selling, with headquarters at Buffalo. The main offices are at Chicago.

A Lucky Investment.

Benton Harbor, Mich., Jan. 25.—Rev. W. A. Williams, pastor of the Universalist church here, has received word that a block of copper stock obtained six years ago by his wife at 6 cents a share is now worth $3 a share. Mr. Williams refuses to tell the number of shares, but it is believed that his wife's good luck is in the neighborhood of $25,000. He will continue to preach.

Gold Not Forthcoming.

Port Huron, Mich., Jan. 25.—A letter has been received from Ronald Crisner, who, together with several Port Huron people, left this city for Redding, Cal., to mine for gold with the aid of a sub-marine outfit. There seems to be discord in the camp, and a meeting of the stockholders has been called at Redding. Considerable Port Huron capital is interested in the venture, and there does not seem to be much gold in sight.

Want Dolph Pardoned.

Owosso, Mich., Jan. 25.—An effort is on foot to secure a pardon for Charles Dolph, sent to the Marquette prison for 20 years in 1895, for an alleged crime perpetrated on his 16-year-old daughter. Dolph pleaded guilty at the time, but it is believed that he did so on account of fear of mob violence. The daughter has since confessed that she lied in the testimony given against her father.

A Sermon by Wire.

Owosso, Mich., Jan. 27.—Lewis C. Hall, a prominent member of the Congregational church, and a member of the grocery firm of Hall Bros., is sick in the city hospital. Mr. Hall expressed a desire to hear the Sunday sermon of Rev. Carlos H. Hanks, so the Union Telephone Co. placed a telephone transmitter upon the preacher's table. Every bed in the hospital was connected with the telephone wire, and the patients, seven in number, including Mr. Hall, heard the sermon distinctly while lying at ease. Other members of the church, especially the old people, heard the sermon in their homes. Singing and other parts of the service were audible.

PRUSSIA'S ACTIONS

Strongly Denounced in Huge Mass Meetings.

IN DETROIT AND CHICAGO

Detroit, Jan. 27.—A vast audience of citizens of this city met at the Light Guard armory yesterday afternoon and strongly denounced the action of the Prussian government in refusing to permit instruction to be given in the Polish language in schools in Prussian Poland. The gathering was the mass meeting of Polish residents of Detroit called to voice protests and adopt resolutions condemning the action of the Prussian authorities in the Wreschen affair.

Rev. John Zzadkowolski, rector of St. Josafat's church, announced the purpose of the meeting briefly, and Fr. Joseph Folta, pastor of the Sacred Heart of Mary church, then explained the condition of affairs in Prussian Poland. James H. Pound followed.

Mr. Pound's address contained many glowing words of praise for Pulawski, Kosciusko and other Polish heroes, and was warmly applauded.

Fr. Ernest Van Dyke, pastor of St. Aloysius church, spoke of the impression which the audience's intense quiet and solemnity had brought upon him. In the course of his remarks he said:

"There is a supreme court in the world; a supreme court of public opinion which has a mighty power in the world. It teaches us that the oppressed have the right to present appeals to any nation and that no nation can disregard such pleas. Therefore I say, when we join in a protest, the first of its kind in this particular case, I believe, the protest will be heard throughout the world, to every corner thereof."

Prof. Romualdo Piatkowski read the resolution of protest which had been drawn up. There was little applause, merely an air of determination apparent in the audience.

Mayor Maybury was introduced and paid a warm tribute to the sturdy integrity and manhood of Polish citizens.

"I came here," said Bishop Foley, "to officially fulfill the duty of my position and ask a blessing on the Polish nation and upon every citizen of Polish descent within these walls. You have a right to protest. I belong by descent to a nation which for 300 years has been protesting against the oppressive acts of England. I pray God," he continued impressively, "that before this century is over God's sun may shine on a liberated Polish nation."

Besides the speakers enumerated Prosecuting Attorney Hunt and other city officials and members of the clergy occupied seats on the platform. A chorus of young girls from the Harmonie society sang a stirring hymn in the Polish language. At the close the whole audience united in song.

Chicago, Jan. 27.—Representatives of the 200,000 Poles living in Chicago met in five mass meetings in different parts of this city last night to protest against the alleged cruelties of Prussia in her Polish provinces. Nearly all of the speakers maintained that the final effort of the Prussian officials was to crush out even the language of Poland, and that this culminating effort of the German officials in Poland was imbued solely with hatred and contempt for the people they rule. It was told how children, flogged by their German teachers for saying their prayers in their native language, had been arrested and thrown into prison, together with their parents, who voiced a protest. These and other indignities recited, caused the deepest feeling and strong words against Prussia were voiced on every hand.

Resolutions of protest were adopted at each meeting and will be forwarded to the Prussian government.

HELPED MAKE THE TUNNEL.

Only Survivor of Famous Libby Prison Escapers is Dead.

Milwaukee, Jan. 27.—Gen. Harrison C. Hobart, the last survivor of the Wisconsin constitutional convention and one of, if not the last, survivor of the original five who planned and made the famous Ross tunnel and by it escaped from Libby prison, died of old age at the hospital at Soldiers' Home Sunday.

Gen. Hobart was born at Ashburnham, Mass., and was graduated from Dartmouth college in 1843. In 1846 he came to Wisconsin and began the practice of law. In the territorial legislature of 1837 he represented Sheboygan and Washington counties, and on the organization of the state was the first state senator from his district. He aided in the framing of the constitution and had a marked influence on much of the early legislation of the state.

Accepted Invitation of Masons.

Philadelphia, Jan. 27.—Announcement has been made by the committee which had the matter in charge that President Roosevelt has accepted the invitation of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania Free and Accepted Masons, to be its guest on Tuesday, Nov. 4 next, at the celebration of the 150th anniversary of the initiation of George Washington into the masonic order. The celebration is to take place in the Masonic Temple here. President Roosevelt became a Mason about two years ago, joining the lodge at Oyster Bay, L. I. George Washington was initiated at Fredericksburg, Md., on Nov. 4, 1752.

Death Ended Revelry.

Three Rivers, Mich., Jan. 27.—Jason Dodge, a young man living at Jones Station, on the Air Line road, west of this city, attended a masquerade on Friday night, got filled up on booze and became so abusive that one of the managers ejected him from the hall about 3 o'clock Saturday morning. Shortly after parties going home found the dead body of Dodge lying near the track. Everything indicated that he had started for home nearby, and on attempting to cross the track had been struck by the engine of a freight train. Dodge was about 20 years old. His parents live near the place of his death.

NOT AN ASPIRANT.

Admiral Schley States He Has No Political Desires.

Chicago, Jan. 27.—The much anticipated arrival of Rear Admiral Schley in this city occurred on Saturday and everywhere he was greeted with endless enthusiasm.

The principal feature of his visit was the banquet given in his honor at the Hamilton club on Saturday evening. In the course of his remarks in a speech to the banqueters he said:

"I wanted only to say that I am simply a sailor and that I have served you in storm and in calm, in sunshine and in bad weather, from pole to pole and from sun to sun. The only motive of my action has been 'my country and my people.'

"I desire to say most emphatically that I have no desire to be other than a sailor. I have no aspiration for any civil office, however high it may be.

"My own ambition has been to serve you faithfully, loyally, devotedly, and if I have succeeded in doing that, the measure of my ambition is that I may retain for the rest of the years that may be vouchsafed for me, your love, your esteem and your respect. I would not care to jeopardize that by seeking or accepting any office where I should be condemned to follow always, rather than to remain in the one profession that I have chosen, where there are occasionally opportunities to lead. That I want to say to you all from the bottom of my heart and with absolute earnestness of meaning. Gentlemen, I thank you."

LIBRARIES IN MEXICO.

Planning on a Four Million-Dollar Lift from Carnegie.

Monterey, Mex., Jan. 27.—If the efforts now making by United States Consul General Philip C. Hanna are successful, four million dollars of Andrew Carnegie's wealth will be used in the establishment of libraries in Mexico. Of this amount, one-fourth is planned to be used in the establishment of a magnificent library in Monterey. The plan contemplates the expenditure of the remaining three millions in the establishment of libraries at Chihuahua, Durango, Tampico, Torreon and San Luis Potosi.

Gen. Hanna has taken up the matter with Mr. Carnegie direct and feels confident of success. He says he expects Mr. Carnegie to be particularly interested in the founding of a library in this city because of the establishment here of the $10,000,000 steel plant and the consequent importing of skilled workmen from the states. Gen. Hanna expects to hear something in connection with the Carnegie move within the next few days.

National Liberals Organize.

Cincinnati, Jan. 27.—The national liberal party was organized here Sunday by representatives from all parts of the country. The preamble to the new constitution which was adopted declares for the separation of church and state to the extent of abolishing chaplains in the army and navy, legislative bodies and all public institutions, the taxation of church property and the abandonment of Sabbath observance. The party is the amalgamation for political purposes of free thinkers, and it is more distinctly in politics than the American secular union. The temporary organization formed at Buffalo last October, with T. J. Bowles of Muncie, Ind., as president, and W. F. Jamison of Cincinnati as secretary, who were in charge of the national convention yesterday, but new officers will be elected today. The free love element was not admitted into the organization, but the woman suffragists were admitted.

Djumala, European Turkey, Jan. 27.—Miss Stone, the captive American missionary, and her companion, Madame Tsilka, have been located near Yapyak, in the vicinity of the frontier. The American delegates conducting the negotiations for the release of the captives have arrived at Banisko (about 30 miles southeast of Djumala) and probably paid over the ransom money Sunday. The infant daughter of Madame Tsilka has been christened Elenka.

"JOKER" WINS CHAMPIONSHIP.

Big Ice Boat Races at Kalamazoo Occurred Sunday.

La Belle Hotel, Gull Lake, Mich., Jan. 27.—Joker wins the state championship, Zero takes the big sweepstakes, and Tormenter gets the Wills cup. These are the results of a fine day's sport on Gull lake yesterday, where a big fleet of the white-winged flyers had been waiting patiently for three days for wind enough to sail a race.

Sunday started out very unfavorably with the ice covered with snow, and at 9 o'clock, when the state championship race was scheduled to start, it was drizzling rain and the wind was very light. Prospects looked very bad, but 11 boats lined up for a pretty start at 10:03:30, over an hour after the scheduled time.

The Joker, the big new flyer owned by Dr. C. Olin of Kalamazoo, made a runaway race of it and won as she pleased, making the 20 miles in 44:59, the Zero being next, but over 10 minutes behind the Joker.

At the start Jimmy Rice, in the Pocahontas, was fouled by the Joker, and after the race protested, but the judge overruled his protest and allowed the win of the Joker to stand. The heavy going was too much for the Pocahontas, and she never got a look in all day long.

The sweepstakes was started immediately after dinner, and resulted in a win for the Zero of Muskegon, she having a handicap of 3:39 on the Joker, and while the larger boat crossed the line first in 44 minutes, the Zero was right behind her and won by a trifle over a minute corrected time.

Sugar Growers' New Contract.

Bay City, Mich., Jan. 27.—The Beet Sugar Growers' association met Saturday afternoon and adopted a new contract for submission to sugar factories. The contract calls for $4.50 a ton for 12 per cent sugar. This is an increase of four cents a ton on extra percentage. Another new feature of the contract is a provision which states that the state chemist shall regulate the proper factor for determining the actual sugar in beets and that he be employed at any time the growers' association deems it necessary to make such test, growers and factories to bear one-half of the expense. The new contract will be submitted to the factory managers next Saturday by executive committee of the growers' association.

Killed While Thinking.

Bay City, Mich., Jan. 27.—Abner Lewis, 54 years old, was struck by an outgoing Detroit & Mackinac train Saturday evening and instantly killed, the body being badly mangled. He was walking on the track towards the approaching train, which was running slowly. The engineer saw the man in the glare of the headlight, but could not make him hear the warning. Lewis had been purchasing lumber from mills in this vicinity. The supposition is that he was engrossed in thinking and did not see the train, as his head was bent forward and hands were behind him.

Will Prosecute the L. of E.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 27.—Deputy Attorney-General Chase, who is assailed in a malicious manner in a circular issued by the League of Educators, against which organization he recently secured a decision from the Berrien circuit court, may seek to have the officers of the organization punished for contempt of court, in failing to comply with the order of ouster. He has no doubt but that he will be able to have the league prosecuted for a wrongful use of the mails, since, according to the decision of the court, the organization is transacting a lottery business.

Insane Woman Suicides.

Coldwater, Mich., Jan. 27.—Mrs. Calvin Ritter, the wife of a prosperous farmer living in Gilead township, 16 miles southwest from here, committed suicide by jumping into a creek one and a half miles from her home. She was found by her husband, who feared she might do herself harm. Mrs. Ritter had never before attempted to take her own life, but insanity seems to run in her family, she having a sister in the asylum at Kalamazoo.

Many Houses to Rent.

Coldwater, Mich., Jan. 27.—The closing of the two big Portland cement factories has proved a severe blow to Coldwater. One year ago, notwithstanding the completion of over 200 new houses during the two preceding years, not a habitable house in Coldwater was for rent. Now it is estimated that not less than 100 are vacant and families are removing from the city by the score.

Cut His Girl's Throat.

Parkersburg, W. Va., Jan. 27.—Thomas Tusker, a colored boy, cut the throat of Mary Beall, a white woman, in front of the negro Methodist church Sunday night. Finding that she was dead, he went home, told his mother what he had done and then tried twice to shoot himself but missed both times. After failing to shoot himself, Tucker cut his own throat with the same knife he had used on the woman. He will probably die. Jealousy.

Alleges He Was Kidnaped.

Niles, Mich., Jan. 27.—What promises to prove one of the most sensational cases ever tried in Cass county circuit court, will be called for trial today. Michael Kennedy, a well-to-do and aged farmer, sues his son, Richard Kennedy, for $10,000 damages for alleged unwarranted detention for six years in St. Joseph's retreat at Dearborn. Kennedy claims he was kidnaped and taken to the asylum in question, and that his son was actuated in the matter by a desire for the old man's property.

Smallpox at Bay City.

Bay City, Mich., Jan. 27.—Six cases of smallpox of from one to two weeks' standing were discovered yesterday afternoon, two in the family of ex-Ald. Joseph Angiers, and four in the family of his brother, Peter Angiers. Health Officer Gilbert found a dozen children of the neighborhood playing in one of the houses. The disease is supposed to have come from Detroit.

THE COURIER OF THE CZAR

By Jules Verne

CHAPTER XV.

MICHAEL STROGOFF and Nadia were once more free, as they had been during the journey from Perm to the banks of the Irtish. But how changed were the circumstances of the journey! Then a comfortable vehicle, teams often renewed, well provided post horses, secured for them a quick journey. Now they went on foot, with an impossibility of procuring for themselves any means of locomotion, without resources, not knowing even how to procure the least wants of life, and they had still to make 400 versts! And, moreover, Michael Strogoff now only saw through the eyes of Nadia.

As for the friend whom chance had given them, they had just lost him under the most affecting circumstances.

It was 10 o'clock at night. For the last three hours and a half the sun had disappeared below the horizon. There was not a house, not a hut, in sight. The last Tartars were lost in the distance. Michael Strogoff and Nadia were indeed alone.

"To what place shall I lead you, Michael?"

"To Irkutsk," he answered.

"By the highroad?"

"Yes, Nadia."

Nadia took the hand of Michael Strogoff, and they once more set out on their journey.

Next morning, Sept. 12, twenty versts farther, at the town of Toulounovskoe, both halted for a short time. The town was burned down and was deserted.

During that day they had to pass the little stream of the Oka, but it was fordable, and that passage offered no difficulty.

But, contrary to what Michael Strogoff had perhaps hoped, there was not any longer a single beast of burden in the country. Every horse, every camel, had been either killed or taken away. It was therefore on foot they must cross this never ending steppe.

Several times Nadia was obliged to stop. Michael Strogoff then took her in his arms, and for the moment, not having to think of Nadia's fatigue, while carrying her he marched more quickly and with his untiring pace.

On the 18th of September, at 10 o'clock at night, both reached at length Kimilteiskoe. From the top of a hill Nadia perceived a line a little less dark on the horizon. It was the Dinka.

Suddenly they stopped, as if their feet had stepped into some crevice in the ground.

A dog's bark was heard across the steppe.

"Do you hear?" said Nadia.

Then came a lamentable cry, a cry of despair, like the last appeal of a human being who is about to die.

"Nicholas! Nicholas!" cried the young girl, urged on by some evil foreboding.

"Come, Michael, come!" said Nadia.

And she who just before could scarcely drag herself along suddenly recovered her strength under the sway of violent excitement.

"Have we left the road?" said Michael Strogoff, feeling that he was treading no longer the dusty road, but the open grass field.

"Yes; it is necessary!" answered Nadia. "It is from over there on the right that the cry came!"

Some minutes afterward the two were only half a verst from the river.

A second bark was heard, and, although more feeble, it was certainly nearer.

Nadia stopped.

"Yes," said Michael, "it is Serko who is barking. He has followed his master."

"Nicholas!" cried the young girl.

Her call remained unanswered. Only some birds of prey rose up and disappeared amid the high clouds of heaven.

And yet a voice came again, which this time murmured in a plaintive tone, "Michael!"

Then a dog, all bleeding, came bounding up to Nadia. It was Serko.

Nicholas could not be far away. He alone could murmur that name of Michael. Where was he? Nadia had not even the strength to call out to him.

Michael Strogoff, lying on the ground, searched with his hand.

Suddenly Serko gave a fresh bark and rushed toward a gigantic bird, which was clawing the ground.

It was a vulture. When Serko precipitated himself upon it, it rose up; but, returning to the charge, it struck the dog.

He again renewed the attack, but he received a blow on the head from that terrible beak, and this time Serko fell back dead on the ground.

"There, there!" said she.

A head rose just above the ground! It would have struck against their feet had it not been for the intense brightness that the heavens cast upon the steppe.

Nadia fell on her knees near that head.

Nicholas, buried up to the neck, according to the atrocious customs of the Tartars, had been abandoned on the steppe to there die of hunger and thirst and perhaps to be torn into pieces by the fangs of wolves or the beaks of birds of prey. A most horrible punishment for the victim thus imprisoned in the earth, who presses the earth without being able to cast it off, having his arms tied and fastened to his body like those of a corpse in a coffin! The victim, living in this clay mold, which he is unable to break, can do nothing but implore death, which is too slow in coming!

It was there the Tartars had interred their prisoner for three days. For three days Nicholas had been waiting for succor, which had come at last too late.

The vultures had perceived that head exposed to the sun's rays, and for some hours the dog defended his master against these ferocious birds.

Michael Strogoff dug the earth with his claspknife to release it from that imprisoned body.

The eyes of Nicholas, closed until then, once more opened themselves.

He recognized Michael and Nadia. Then he murmured:

"Adieu, friends. I am happy to have seen you once more. Pray for me."

And these words were the last.

Michael Strogoff continued to dig the soil, which, being strongly trodden down, had the hardness of a rock, and at length he succeeded in drawing from it the body of the unfortunate man. He listened if his heart still beat. It beat no more!

He wished then to bury it, that it might not remain exposed on the steppe, and that hole in which Nicholas had been buried alive he enlarged and deepened in such a manner as to be able to lay him there when dead. The faithful Serko was placed near his master.

At that moment a great noise was heard on the road about half a verst away.

Michael Strogoff listened.

By the noise he knew at once that a detachment of cavalry was advancing toward the Dinka.

"Nadia, Nadia!" said he in a low voice.

At his voice Nadia, who had remained in prayer, rose up.

"You see them! You see them!" he said to her.

"The Tartars!" she murmured.

It was indeed the advance guard of the emir which was defiling quickly on the road to Irkutsk.

"They shall not prevent me from interring him," said Michael Strogoff.

Soon Nicholas' body, with his hands joined on his breast, was laid in the tomb. Michael Strogoff and Nadia, kneeling down, prayed the last time for that poor being, good and inoffensive, who through devotedness to them had lost his life.

"And now," said Michael, throwing back the earth, "the wolves of the steppe shall not devour him."

Then his hand stretched in menace toward the troop of horsemen which was passing.

"On our journey, Nadia!" said he.

Michael Strogoff could no longer follow the highroad, now occupied by the Tartars. He must throw himself across the steppe and turn Irkutsk. In doing this they would have to cross the Dinka and thus would be relieved from one great anxiety.

Nadia could no longer drag herself along, but she could see for him. He took her in his arms and struck into the southwest of the province.

There remained for them to travel more than 200 versts. How could it be done? How could food be found on the journey?

By what superhuman energy would they succeed in passing the first slopes of the Sayensk mountains? Neither Nadia nor he could tell.

And yet twelve days after, at 6 o'clock in the evening, an immense sheet of water rolled at the feet of Michael Strogoff.

It was Lake Baikal.

Lake Baikal is situated at a height of 1,700 feet above the level of the sea. Its length it about 900 versts, its breadth about a hundred. Its depth is unknown. Mme. de Bourboulon tells us that the sailors say that it wishes to be called "Mrs. Sea." If one calls it "Mr. Lake," it at once is in a rage. Anyhow, according to a Russian legend, a Russian is never drowned there.

This immense basin of fresh water, fed by more than 300 rivers, is embosomed in a magnificent circle of volcanic mountains. It has no other outlet but the Angara, which, after having passed Irkutsk, throws itself into the Yenisei a little above the town of Yeniseisk.

The first days of October had come. The sun now sank below the horizon at 5 o'clock, and the long nights allowed the temperature to fall to zero in the thermometers. The first snow, which was to remain until summer, already whitened the neighboring heights. During the Siberian winter this interior sea, with its ice several feet thick, is dotted with trains of couriers and caravans.

It was at the southwest point of the lake that Michael Strogoff had just arrived, carrying Nadia, whose whole life, so to speak, was concentrated in her eyes. What could they both expect in this wild part of the province but to die there of want and destitution? And yet how many still remained to be made of those 6,000 versts that the courier of the czar should attain his end? Only sixty versts along the shore of the lake as far as the mouth of the river Angara, and eighty versts from the mouth of the Angara to Irkutsk—in all a hundred and forty versts, say a three days' journey for a strong and vigorous man even on foot.

Nadia first perceived this group when Michael Strogoff, carrying her in his arms, came out from the defile of the mountains.

"Stop!" she cried. "The Tartars! The Tartars!"

The young girl feared for an instant that it was nothing else than a detachment of Tartars sent to scour the shores of Lake Baikal, in which case flight would be cut off for both.

But Nadia was soon reassured on this head.

"They are Russians!" she cried.

But they had been perceived, and some of those Russians, running up to them, led the blind man and the young girl to the border of a little beach to which was moored a raft.

The raft was about to depart.

These Russians were fugitives of various conditions whom a common interest had gathered together on this point of the Baikal.

Driven back by the Tartar scouts, they sought to take refuge in Irkutsk, and, not being able to reach that place by land, since the invaders had taken up position on both banks of the Angara, they hoped to gain it by descending the river which runs through the town.

The fugitives had their raft fully prepared for the voyage, and had Michael Strogoff been even a few hours later he would have found the place deserted.

Now, he was welcomed and bidden to go upon the raft at once, as its slow motion rendered it advisable to lose no time in setting out.

Their project made the heart of Michael Strogoff leap for joy. He could now play his last chance. But he had the strength to dissemble, wishing to preserve more strictly than ever his incognita.

The plan of the fugitives was very simple. A current of the Baikal skirts the higher shore of the lake as far as the mouth of the Angara. It is this current which they counted upon making use of to early reach the outlet of Baikal. From this point to Irkutsk the rapid waters of the river would draw them along at a speed of ten or twelve versts the hour. In a day and a half they ought to be in sight of the town.

Every means for embarking was wanting at that place.

They had to supply this want. A raft, or, rather, a float of wood, like those which generally float on the Siberian rivers had been constructed.

A forest of pine, which towered along the shore, had furnished the floating material. The trunks, lashed together with willow branches, formed a platform on which a hundred persons would have easily found room.

It was on this raft that Michael Strogoff and Nadia were carried. The young girl was once more herself. They gave to her some nourishment, as also to her companion. Then, lying down on a bed of leaves, she immediately fell into a sound sleep.

To those who interrogated him Michael Strogoff said nothing concerning the events which had occurred at Tomsk. He gave himself out as an inhabitant of Krasnoiarsk who had not been able to reach Irkutsk before the troops of the emir had arrived on the left bank of the Dinka, and he added that very likely the main body of the Tartars had taken up their position before the capital of Siberia. Even among friends it was almost as important to preserve secrecy as to his mission as if among enemies.

One never knows what ears are listening when the tongue speaks. The friend of today may be the foe of tomorrow, and even the firm friend, if indiscreet, is more to be dreaded than the known enemy.

There was not, therefore, an instant to lose. Besides, the frost became more and more keen. The temperature during the night fell far below zero. Some pieces of ice had already formed on the surface of the Baikal. If the raft could easily make its way on the lake, it would not be the same between the banks of the Angara in case those pieces of ice should come to impede its course.

Therefore for all these reasons it was necessary that the fugitives should start without delay.

At 8 o'clock at night the moorings were unfastened, and under the action of the current the raft followed the lake shore.

Long poles, handled by robust mujiks, sufficed to guide it. An old sailor of the Baikal had taken command of the raft. He was a man of sixty, all tanned with the breezes of the lake. A white and very thick beard descended on his breast. He had on his head a fur hat. Of a grave and austere appearance, his wide and long riding coat, drawn tight at the belt, hanging down to his heels, this silent old man, sitting at the stern, commanded by gesture and did not speak ten words in ten hours.

Besides, the whole management consisted in keeping the raft in the current which ran along the shore, without allowing it to go far out into the deep water.

Although the journey was not without danger, the voyagers might reasonably hope to safely accomplish it.

At any rate they had become accustomed to both hardship and danger. No fate could be worse than the one that awaited them if they remained.

So despite the past and present they were many hopeful, almost happy hearts on board that rude craft that floated along so lazily.

WANTED TO GET IN.

He Was Willing to Join if It Didn't Cost Too Much.

A lank, long countryman stood outside of the reading room door of the library of congress and looked with longing eyes at its gorgeous interior. Admittance had been refused on his declaring that he had no intention of reading, but he lingered near the door hoping something would turn up to let him in. Finally he again approached the doorkeeper.

"You say I can't get in, boss?" he asked.

"Not unless you want to read," was the discouraging reply.

"A dollar wouldn't be any object to you, would it, boss?"

The doorkeeper shook his head and waved the insistent visitor away. In a few moments three members of congress approached and, nodding to the doorkeeper, said, "We are members, you know," and passed in through the door. The countryman darted forward again.

"I say, boss," he asked confidentially, "how much does it cost to be a member? I belong to one lodge already, but ef it ain't too all fired much I'll go you, for I certainly do want to git in thar and set down a spell; I certainly do."—New York Tribune.

The Prayer That Hurt.

A member of a certain Massachusetts parish, prominent for his thrift and personal consequence, was also notorious for his overbearing assumptions and pompous airs. Under the distress and fright of a dangerous illness he "put up notes" on several successive Sundays, and after his recovery, according to usage, he offered a note to be read by the minister expressive of his thanks.

The minister was somewhat "large" in this part of his prayer, recalling the danger and the previous petitions of the "squire," and returning his grateful acknowledgments with the prayer that the experience might be blessed to the spiritual welfare of the restored man. He closed with these words:

"And we pray, O Lord, that thy servant may be cured of that ungodly strut, so offensive in the sanctuary."

Middle Ages Burials.

In the middle ages founders and patrons of ecclesiastical buildings began to be buried nearer and nearer to the fabric of the church or cathedral. First the porch, then the cloister, then the chapter house or chantry, came under demand; the chancel was next encroached upon, and lastly burials were allowed under the altar itself. At the other extreme of custom was the burial of malefactors and stillborn children on the north or "devil's side" of the yard, a practice concerning which chapters might be written.

Mrs. Winks—Why in the world didn't you write to me while you were away?

Mrs. Minks—I did write.

Mrs. Winks—Then I presume you gave the letter to your husband to mail and he is still carrying it around in his pocket.

Mrs. Minks—No; I posted the letter myself.

Mrs. Winks—Ah! Then, it is in my husband's pocket.—New York Weekly.

Repairing Neatly Done

Never thought of such a sign for a medicine did you? Well, it's a good sign for Scott's Emulsion. The body has to be repaired like other things and Scott's Emulsion is the medicine that does it.

These poor bodies wear out from worry, from over-work, from disease. They get thin and weak. Some of the new ones are not well made—and all of the old ones are racked from long usage.

Scott's Emulsion fixes all kinds. It does the work both inside and out. It makes soft bones hard, thin blood red, weak lungs strong, hollow places full. Only the best materials are used in the patching and the patches don't show through the new glow of health.

No one has to wait his turn. You can do it yourself—you and the bottle.

This picture represents the Trade Mark of Scott's Emulsion and is on the wrapper of every bottle.

ROUND ABOUT US.

No more toll between here and Ann Arbor. The franchise of the Ann Arbor and Lodi toll road expired yesterday and the stockholders will not ask for a renewal. It is the last toll gate in southern Michigan.—Saline Observer.

D. H. C. Bowen of Tecumseh, was in town Monday in consultation with the township board in the interest of the Abbot voting machine. Two years ago our township tried three machines and they broke down during the forenoon on election day. The new machines are quite changed in many respects, are more simple yet larger and capable of recording a greater number of candidates. Mr. Bowen is hopeful of showing to our board the necessity of their ordering one of the machines.—Saline Observer.

Michigan beet sugar manufactures are making a great effort to prevent legislation in favor of a reduction of the duty on Cuban sugar. The delegation at Washington is headed by W. L. Churchill, president of the Michigan Sugar Manufactures' Association, and Fred R. Hathaway, secretary. Mr. Hathaway was for several years superintendent of the Hudson schools, and is now connected with one of the larger sugar factories, of which he is manager. As usual, his ability gives him prominence among people whom he is associated.—Hudson Post.

Many friends of Royal S. Copeland have signed a request addressed to him asking that he allow his name to be used as a republican candidate for the nomination for representative to congreess. Mayor Copeland has so far declined to give a decisive answer, but it is understood that under some contingencies he may consent to acquiesce to his friends' wishes. Much interest is being taken in the matter. Attorney W. W. Wedemeyer is decided in his intentions. He is frank in stating that he is a candidate.—Ann Arbor Democrat. With both Wedemeyer and Copeland from Washtenaw it would look as if H. C. Smith would not have a very easy time with the nomination next time.

Thos. Alderdyce, of Cambridge, has a record few men can boast. He is in his 76th year, and is as lively and energetic as a man of 25. He is an old pioneer of the county, has endured the hardships and privations incident to pioneer life, witnessing the gradual advancement from ox team motive power in 1830 to steam and electricity in 1900. He has never been sick a day, never had an ache or a pain from illness of any kind, mumps, measles, whooping cough all passing him by. He was never sued and never sued any one. He has never been arrested, never been intoxicated, owes no man a cent, pays for his paper in advance, smokes a cigar when he pleases, goes to church when he chooses, believes as much of the sermon as good sense will authorise, never made the wife build the winter fires in the morning, votes the prohibition ticket, if he thinks best, supports democrats when he wants to, votes for republicans when he thinks it for his interest and the best interest of the country, and to-day is one of the best preserved men past the allotted three score and ten who can be found in the county, and can chop more wood, pitch more hay, cut more grass with a scythe and husk more corn in one week than any man of his age in the county—Adrian Press.

The happiest man in the whole world is the common every day go-as-you please chap who makes his own living, pays his own bills and bears the honest respect of his neighbors and fellowmen. He sticks a little money aside as he goes along, but he does not strive to get a corner on the total output, and he is the slave to neither ambition nor society. He never expects to wear out the bosom part of his pants in the senate or any other public chamber, and when he slides into his clothes in the morning he never wasts valuable time trying to pick out the right tint of socks, suspenders and neckties that will blend with the general effect. He will wear a boiled shirt when he feels like it, and when he don't feel like it; which is more often the case, some other shirt will do, and when his pet corn moveth itself aright he whips out his jack knife and cuts a four inch gash in his boot and nothing is ever said in the paper about it. He has an appetite like a gang saw and he never has to sit up nights doping himself with dyspepsia medicine or putting on poultices on his his conscience. He whales his own children when they need it whether it is fashionable or not, he splits his own wood and is not afraid to look the tax assessor in the face. He believes in the doctrine of live and let live, and when he encounters one of the needy he does not stutter with his pocketbook. The plain plug of a man is happy because he is satisfied and doesn't spend the best years of his life in looking for something that is about four sizes too large for him.—Exchange.

It seems the boys in English II class are showing partiality in making "goo-goo" eyes at the girls in Miss Hall's room, 'tis hard we know to resist such a temptation, but Miss Hall does not appreciate their attentions and says that something shortly will happen.

GYMNASIUM BANQUET.

The banquet given in honor of the members of the Gym. was a great success. Upon the last stroke of eight there gathered at the Gym. rooms at A. W. Mills' such an assembly that were Tecumseh, the Indian chief, to rise from his grave, he would not doubt a counsel of war was to be held.

Among those affording amusement were the following: The Katzenjammer twins (Leon Williamson and R. Mills) in their thrilling act upon the trapeze, jumping from a platform, catching (or missing) the bar, then whirling through air, they would safely alight upon the floor (or upon their necks) for which feat they were greeted with deafening applause. Next the attention was drawn by Pad Orr, Mac McClure, Bert Mills and Prof. Marsh in their attempt at tying themselves into "Gordian Knots."

Jack Frost together with Dudley Snell did their thrilling act upon the trapeze. Percy Slayton showed great tact in dodging flying feet. Gymnastic specialties were concluded by Joby Camburn and Chin Lowry, who are unexcelled in the art of punching the bag.

At last in tones loud and clear rang out the bass profundo voice of Bert Mills announcing in accounts that bespoke the condition of his stomach, that supper was ready, a silent procession could then be seen, winding its way toward the dining room, which when reached each man found his chair with out trouble.

The hostess showed great skill in the arrangement of the chairs, Orr and Snell occupied the head of the table, while the heavy weights were on one side and the heavy eaters on the other. After several moments of deep meditation, supper was served. Mrs. Mills and Mrs. Heesen waiting table. Dona Wright as toastmaster received great applause. About this time orange jelly was served in small goblets, Theo. Grotenhuis mistaking it for some mysterious beveredge, tried in vain to blow off the "phome" but seeing his error, he turned the color of an evening sunset.

The several courses being served, ice cream and cake were at last brought on. Pad Orr, who had purposely wore his father's vest, found that room was still needed and immediately proceeded to make it.

Mac McClure next offered a toast to the sick member, Edward Marks, to which all responded. A run around the table was next indulged in, when all declared themselves through.

Shortly through the stillness of the house sounded the soft strains of a piano, after this many specialties were given among which were "Der Leedle German Bant," consisting of Orr, Snell and McClure. Next Jack Frost gave a vocal selection, Dona Wright, a whistling solo, Chin Lowry, a vocal selection entitled, "I don't care what happens to me now," the rendering of which gives bright hopes for his future.

After this all adjourned to the out-doors and proceeded to have a "hot time," having marched about town for some time to the tune of "Turkey in the straw" the members found themselves in the public park, here a tableau was enacted entitled "The man behind the gun" The march was then resumed and upon reaching the Mills residence three cheers were given the hostess, the Gym. and the Mills brothers. The members then disbanded.

All enjoyed the evening, Mrs. Mills proving herself an admirable entertainer and Mrs. Heesen an adept at attending to the wants of the hungry.

FOUND ! ! ! "After the banquet at A. W. Mills, there were found by the hostess several vest buttons, these being of different styles, not suitable to her needs the owners may have their property by calling at residence.

Must Have Help.

Tecumseh has grown to be a great celery growing place and in the season sells the best celery that can be produced. MARY E. BROWN

Married at the Home of her Mother in Adrian to

LEON DECKER

An infomal yet pretty home wedding was solemnized at the home of Mrs. M P. Brown, No. 25 East Maumee street, Thursday evening, in the presence of the families of the contracting parties. Promptly at 7:30 o'clock Miss Mary E. Brown and Leon Decker were united in marriage by Rev. E. M. McMillin, pastor of the Presbyterian church, at the conclusion of which congratulations were extended.

The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Clark W. Decker, and is a native of this city. He is chief engineer of the Hauck railroad with headquarters at at Cape Girardeau, Mo. He took a course with City Surveyor James Blair, after which he attended Adrian college and later took a course at the University at Ann Arbor. He assisted in surveying the Lima Northern road through this city, and later went to Ohio in the same capacity. Two years ago he went to Cape Girardeau, where he secured his present position. He is a capable young man, who has a host of friends here.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Brown, and for the past ten years has been a resident of this city, where she has won by her winning ways and cheerful disposition, many friends, being a favorite with all.

Mr and Mrs. Decker left at 10:10 Thursday night for Toledo, St. Louis and other points. They will make their home at Cape Girardeau, Mo.—Adrian Times.

Miss Brown is a niece of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Helm of this place and is well and favorably known in Tecumseh, having resided here about ten years ago. She has the congratulations of her many friends which she gained while here.

HON. HENRY C SMITH

Has said that the Adrian Postoffice Will be Presided over by

"DOC" SMITH

No more and that the Next Man will be Frank E. Priddy.

Washington, D. C., January 25—(Special)—Representative H. C. Smith wore his best smile to-day when he learned that the president had sent to the senate the nomination of Frank E. Priddy, to be postmaster at Adrian to succeed "Doc" Smith, whose days as a federal officeholder are now numbered. There is no doubt as to the nomination being confirmed, and representative Smith will go home happy on Saturday.

"I'm glad," he said, "that the president accepted my advice in the matter."

The second district will shortly be long on rural free delivery routes, as Representative H. C. Smith has been notified by Supt. Machen that Special Agent Hatzenbuhler will report to him next week and remain in that territory until the demands of his constituents are satisfied.—Detroit Free Press.

There has been no doubt from the beginning that "Doc" Smith would have to go and for this "Doc" has only himself to blame. He fought H. C. Smith on his nomination and it is but human nature and republican politics that "Doc" would have to give up the post office when the term was out. It however remains to be seen whether this is best policy for Congressman Smith or not. "Doc" has a strong following and of course it will all now go against H. C.

HE WHO SUCCEEDS.

Must Advertise. The Best and Easiest Way in the NEWSPAPERS

But There are Many Other Good Ways

Very few people understand or even attempt the principles of advertising. Many people say, "I would give anything to know how to advertise and if I knew anything about it would do a lot of advertising," but all that is neccessary is a little time and thought and it is easy to write not only a good advertisement but an advertisement that will do some good and sell the goods.

When a salesman comes to Tecumseh, the merchant looks his goods over carefully and concludes whether he will purchase or not. Are the styles or patterns right? Is the price right? and twenty more quires are brought up before the purchase is made' When the goods come they are put away on the shelf and allowed to sell themselves with no demand created except the customer happens to see them in the store when coming for some other article. One tenth of the time spent in advertising to sell that it takes to buy the goods will construct good, plain, sensible advertising matter and easily dispose of the goods purchased.

With the exception of the Standard Oil Company, the National Biscuit Company is the most formidable trust in this country. No man unless he belongs to the trust can start a cracker factory, for he cannot buy the machinery. The trust not only controls the cracker factories, but the output of machinery. Still to-day the National Biscuit trust spends as much money for advertising as does any concern in America. In all the magazines of January one can see a full page heavy paper advertisement printed in colors of Nabisca, this is the new sugar wafer made by the National Biscuit Company. It is certainly up to this time the finest thing of the kind ever made. But to sell this product a demand must be created and the retail groceryman cannot create this demand.

The Biscuit Co salesman was here the other day. He sold a few of these goods to Anderson Bros. The HERALD knows the lady who had read the advertisement in a magazine and inquired at the store for the goods. Before three months rolls around every grocery man in Tecumseh will handle Nabisca Sugar Wafers, because the trade demands them and the trade knows of them in the first place from the magazine advertisements. It is necessary for all men to advertise new goods to create a demand for them. It is necessary for all men to advertise old well known goods that his neighbor may not get the trade away from him.

Every housewife uses baking powder and the Royal Baking Powder people never stop advertising their goods for fear others may get the start of them. Consequently the Royal people lead all competitors and will continue to do so as long as they continue to advertise.

A number of years ago a company making Hop Bitters did a great business and in a few years cleaned up three millions of dollars for its stockholders. Some new men were elected directors of the company and they concluded to save all the money taken in and pay no more money for advertising. Thought, in fact that the old advertising would last for some time to come. They stopped, in the meantime new medicines sought to come to the front, advertised, and in two years Hop Bitters were forgotten and the concern quit.

A business man who prospers must advertise. He need not advertise in the newspapers, but this is the cheapest and best way, but he must in some way or his neighbor will get the start of him.

William P. Hicks.

William P. Hicks died yesterday morning at the home of his daughter, Mrs. James M. Eggleston, at the age of 89 years. He was born in Alleghany county, New York, and was of the old French stock which settled at Pittsburg and held Fort Duquesne. He was also an artillery man under General Scott. For the past 20 years he has made his home in Portland. He was a former resident of Tecumseh and was well known in Lenawee county. He leaves a wife and four children.

The funeral will be held to-morrow afternoon at 1 o'clock from the residence of his daughter, 70 East Ninth street, and interment will be in Greenwood cemetery.

While Mr. Hicks was not a pioneer, he had lived in Oregon for many years, and was well known throughout the state.

Away for Years.

Years ago Joe Richley went to school in Tecumseh, afterward was newsboy on the Lake Shore between Adrian and Jackson, after that was conductor on the main line of the Lake Shore, but in later years he has been on the Mexican Central railroad and has been very successful in that southern country.

Many Tecumseh men remember "Joe" very well and he has sent many nice little remembrances to E. C. Kennedy in the last few years. Some weeks ago came a large Mexican straw hat, some sandals, a cane, Mexican toys and playing cards. In fact all these things are very curious to the people here and old friends will be pleased to see Joe again, when he comes back to Michigan

A LONG FELT WANT.

It is hard to always be pleasant.

Good natured people are often irritable.

If you knew the reason you would not be surprised.

Ever have Itching Piles?

Nothing will annoy you so.

The constant itching sensation.

Hard to bear, harder to get relief.

Keeps you awake nights.

Spoils your temper, nearly drives you crazy.

Isn't relief and cure a long felt want?

It is to be had for everyone in Doan's Ointment.

Mr. C. C. Church, of 520 South 7th street, Ann Arbor, now retired from the active duties of life, says:

"I have no hesitation in recommending Doan's Ointment. To anyone requiring a healing and soothing preparation it will prove invaluable. I suffered for years from itching hemorhoids and though I tried everything I could hear of and used remedies prescribed by scores of friends I was unable to obtain permanent relief until my attention was called to Doan's Ointment. I was somewhat surprised after the second application to notice what a different effect it had from anything I had hitherto used. Encouraged I used it strictly according to directions and in a surprisingly short length of time when you take into account the number of years I was afflicted, the irritation ceased and the inflammation was allayed. When Doan's Ointment cured me it will cure others."

A Pretty Big Tiger.

Old Dickey S., a very wealthy but very illiterate East India merchant in London, took a pair of compasses and set about examining a large map of India, the margin of which was illustrated with drawings of the wild and domestic animals of the country.

Suddenly Dickey dropped the compass in amazement. "It can't be! It ain't in the horder of nature that it should be! Impossible! Ridiculous!"

"Why, Dickey, what's the matter?"

"Wot's the matter? Vy, this Bengal tiger is ninety miles long!"

Electric Centipeds.

Least attractive among the insects which give light are the so called "electric centipeds"—black crawlers with many legs, which have been likened to serpents' skeletons in miniature. They move in a snakelike fashion, forward or backward, leaving behind them a bright track of phosphoric light. However, they are most accustomed to appear in the daytime, when the illumination they afford is not visible.

Unfortunate Error.

"What do you mean by this, sir?" demanded the angry advertiser.

"What's the matter?" inquired the publisher of the Bangtown Bugle.

CLOUD FORMATIONS.

What Causes Them to Assume Such Variety In Shape.

A good idea of the correct reason for varying cloud shapes may be obtained by watching the steam from a railway engine under different conditions. As it issues from the funnel it is transparent water vapor. On a moist, cloudy day it will hang in thick, fleecy masses in the track of the train. In dry, bright weather it will rise in light, thin wreaths, which quickly disappear, and again when the engine is standing in a station the steam will collect in masses above it.

These are practically the conditions of cloud formation. The shapes vary according to height above the earth, to the temperature of the particular air current in which they are floating, to the force and direction of the wind at the various altitudes and also in some measure to the electrical condition of the atmosphere and the amount of dust in it.

As a rule, the higher the clouds the lighter they are and the more widely spread. The so called mares' tails and mackerel sky are good examples of this. Some of the former are over five miles high and are believed to be composed of minute particles of ice. The clouds in a mackerel sky are generally about three miles high.

The heavy cumulus clouds which so often look like vast mountain ranges are only found in the lower and moister layers of atmosphere. Their lower surfaces are from half to three-quarters of a mile above the earth, while their higher points may range from two to three miles in elevation. Still lower than these come the heavy flat masses of nimbus or rain clouds which are seldom more than half a mile above the earth.

Sports of the Crusaders.

In their amusements Christians and infidels mingled very readily. During the truces the two frequently engaged in jousts and proved one another's skill in horsemanship, in the use of the lance, in the wielding of the sword and in the hurling of the spear. All, even the knights of the religious orders, entered with zest into these friendly rivalries. Both Christian and infidel were extremely fond of hunting and falconry. A long section in the assizes is devoted to the laws concerning the latter subject. Ousama in his autobiography devoted many pages to accounts of hunting experiences and to the art of falconry. The crusading leaders took their hunting dogs and falcons with them as a matter of course when they set out on the holy war.

As the close proximity of the enemy exposed both parties to constant attack, hunting agreements were made by which each might hunt in security on disputed territory. Gifts of dogs and hawks were interchanged, and friendships were sometimes formed because of the mutual interest in breeding hunting animals.—International Magazine.

His Particular Muse.

He had been calling on a young lady and had been talking against time for several hours, not noticing that she was, to say the least, slightly wearied.

"Do you know," he said, after completing a monologue of several thousand words and thinking a little flattery would be appreciated, "while talking tonight I have felt as if I were inspired by one of the muses. And which one do you think it is?"

He looked searchingly into her beautiful face. The modest blush for which he was watching proved to be a wide yawn, which grew wider as she answered:

"I guess the muse that inspires you tonight must be Euterpe."

He didn't really know anything about mythology, so he couldn't tell just what she meant. But when he got home he took down his encyclopedia, and there in cold type, staring him in the face, he saw:

"Euterpe—the muse who presided over wind instruments."

SAVED BY DUST.

How a Handful of Soldiers Fooled General Early.

"Did I ever tell you how clouds of dust once saved Washington city from what many people believe would have been certain capture at the hands of the Confederates?" asked a member of the old Veterans' Reserve corps, which was on duty at Fort Stevens during the war.

"It was when the Army of Northern Virginia was just outside the Capital City. You may remember that General Early, who was in command of this particular division of the Confederate forces, in writing to refute statements published in northern papers to the effect that he could easily have marched into Washington, said: 'I knew the defenses were weak when I arrived, but my troops were so exhausted from the enforced march that a halt was absolutely necessary, and the next morning I knew, by clouds of dust, that re-enforcements had arrived.'

"That dust, gentlemen, was raised by a few men, not exceeding 100, of the Veteran Reserve corps. The temporary commander of this company, a stout man of medium height, whose name or rank I did not learn, because he wore no blouse or insignia, placed the men in line in the rear of and between Fort Stevens and Fort Slocum. After making a short speech in which he urged every man to do his best he directed us to march down some distance on the grass past Fort Stevens. Once there he told us to break ranks and right about, returning in the middle of the road and kicking up all the dust we possibly could.

We doubled on the line, marching down on the grass and coming back in the dusty road. It was a dry season, and we all had on broad soled shoes. We made the dust fly, I tell you, and it is no wonder General Early thought re-enforcements by the thousands had come to the relief of the handful on duty at the forts."—Washington Star.

LADIES AT DINNER.

From the Position of Carver to the Principal Seat.

The presence of ladies at dinner was brought about by necessity more than by the gallantry due to their sex. Servers and henchmen were superseded by lady carvers, who worked at a side table. In Elizabethan times at private dinners it became usual to place the principal joints and grand pieces at the upper end of the table, above the salt, so the chief guests could see the joints and secure choice helpings. We have something of this kind in the habit which prevails at restaurants of first showing the game, poultry, etc., to the diners before carving. The place which came to the fair sex from necessity was soon claimed by them as their right, and they passed from the menial position of carver to the occupiers of the principal seat. The lady had helpers who deemed it an honor to serve her in their turn.

In this duty of semiprofessional carver lies one of the first causes of the paper frills for legs of mutton, etc., for it was used in every case where the operator had to grasp some tangible part of the joint with the left hand. In 1653 a grand dame suggested that it would appear "more comely and decent to use a fork," this in spite of existing prejudice.

It was at this time, too, that travelers from Holland introduced into England the fashion of seating men and women alternately, the adoption of which put an end to lady carvers. Then the author of "The Cook's Oracle" suggested that joints and large birds should be carved before they came to table, thus starting the now prevailing fashion of carving at the side table.

Gifted With No Fatal Dower.

Some months ago the father of a young man who had recently entered the married state had occasion to dispatch his faithful but somewhat outspoken old servant to his son's residence.

When he returned, eager to learn the old man's opinion of the lady, he asked:

"Well, you saw the bride, Thomas?"

"Yigh; Aw seed her."

"She's a very rich lady, Thomas."

"Yigh; so she is, Aw've yerd."

"Well, then, what's your own private opinion, Thomas, eh?"

"Aw think she's a reyt bonny wench to tawk to as weel as bein' rich and cliver; but, maisther, iv beauty's a sin she wain't ha' that to onswer fur!"—London Spare Moments.

Product of the Clove Tree.

The limbs of the clove tree being very brittle, a peculiar four sided ladder is used. As fast as the buds are collected they are spread in the sun until they assume a brownish color, when they are put into the storehouse ready for market. A ten-year-old plantation should produce twenty pounds of cloves to a tree. Trees of twenty years frequently produce upward of 100 pounds each.

Wall Street Methods.

City Nephew—I'll go out and help him. I learned all about that in the broker's office where I work.—New York Herald.

Birdie Blinks—Picture nothin'.

Happy Hogan—Never have de price?

Birdie Blinks—Course I had de price, but I never had de nerve.—Judge.

Why She Complains.

"She finds fault with her husband's saalry, they say."

"Yes; she says it isn't like her father used to make."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Calling Up Fish.

The other day several New York brokers received telephone orders to buy a certain stock and notify Mr. Fish at a given telephone number. Calling up that number, the response was invariably, "Which one is wanted?" Then followed this conversation:

"How many of them are there?"

"Several hundred, large and small."

"I want the head of the firm."

"Oh, then, you want Colonel Jones."

"Colonel Jones? No, I want Mr. Fish. Who in thunder are you?"

"The Aquarium!"

SALT AND PEPPER.

Many Think They Are Only of Value In Seasoning Food.

Salt and pepper, as generally considered, are of value in bringing out the flavor of the food to which they are added. That they have any value from a health standpoint is not so generally recognized. You may know that a lump of salt is good for a horse, but you do not stop to consider how important salt is for your own well being. In eastern countries the condiments, such as pepper, are used to profusion in all foods. Gastric troubles common enough in other countries are conspicuously absent, and the free use of pepper has much to do with that fact. Salt and pepper work against fermentation. When the stomach is out of order, or, as the common saying is, upset, it is in a state of fermentation.

A certain very wise physician who has advanced to the point where drugs seem the unimportant thing and common sense the important in making the sick well is advocating the use of pepper and salt even in a glass of milk. It improves the flavor to a remarkable degree, a fact you can prove to your own satisfaction by taking two glasses of milk, one in its original simplicity, the other changed by the addition of a pinch of salt and a dash of pepper, then sip a little of each. The chances are that you will prefer the seasoned milk. Besides improving the flavor and overcoming the tendency toward fermentation the pepper will practically disable any microbes that may be floating in the fluids. Thus the gastric juices will perform their perfect work of changing microbes to food.

One of the best remedies for a disturbed digestion is hot water to which have been added salt and paprika. If taken a full hour and a half before breakfast, a cupful of this very palatable drink will completely cleanse the stomach and leave it in good condition. Out of a hundred persons selected at random it is no exaggeration to say that eighty eat too much and also that these same eighty fail of proper mastication. Weakened digestions are of course the direct result of overeating and insufficient mastication, and weakened digestion means undermined systems. At the extremes of life, youth and old age, it is wisdom to make the diet much the same. A child's nourishment should be very simple, so in old age it should grow plainer and plainer. —Chicago Tribune.

Never Loses a Servant.

Every one acquainted with a certain practical millionaire living in a cross street not far from the Fifth avenue highlands wonders how he manages never to lose a good servant. He explains his system in a few words: "I pay fair wages, tip my servants when they deserve it and encourage my guests to do the same. If you dine with me this evening and are particularly pleased with your waiter, Armand, you are at liberty to remember him to the extent of a dollar, no more. Make the tip a quarter, a half, three-quarters, if you please, but never more than a dollar. If you do, he will give me the surplus, and I shall have to return it to you. Tip my butler, my cook my maids, if you will, but not on the sly. Do it openly, as they are taught to avoid deceit."—New York Press.

Valley Forge.

My impression had been that Valley Forge was a wild glen high among the mountains, where winter frosts and snows held unrelaxing sway for many long, dark months every year. But really its situation is neither lofty nor remote, and the rigors of the cold are not nearly what they would be in our more northerly states. Comparatively little snow falls, and often there is not a week's sleighing the winter through.

The valley is only twenty-three miles from Philadelphia, with which it has direct communication by a railroad that skirts along the Schuylkill river.—Clifton Johnson in Woman's Home Companion.

When He Prays.

"Do you say your prayers?" asked the little girl.

"Well, sometimes," replied the little boy.

"When?" asked the little girl.

"Well," returned the little boy, "when Bob an' I get to playin' an' makin' an awful racket while we're goin' to bed an' we hear pop comin' up stairs two steps at a time we drop right down on our knees an' begin to pray, an' when he gets to our door he don't dare disturb us."—Chicago Post.

Serene Confidence.

"I am afraid," said the publisher, "that you are harming your reputation by the indifferent work you are putting into this new serial."

"Nonsense," answered the self assured author. "Even if the work is unusually poor the public will take it for granted that I am great. Otherwise I couldn't get such stuff published."—Washington Star.

In the Gloaming.

Sweetheart — It's awful sudden, George, but you may ask papa.—New York Times.

A Most Gentle Touch.

"'Do unto others as you would have others do unto you,'" said Markley. "That's the Golden Rule, and I believe in it too. Don't you?"

"Well," replied Borroughs, "if I did I'd be offering to lend you $10 this minute."—Philadelphia Press.

To a woman it seems easy for a man to make money. To a man it seems easy for a woman to be amiable.—Atchison Globe.

The Coming Race.

"I see that some English doctor or something says that we are developing into a legless race."

"How could there be a race without legs?"

"Easy. What's the matter with a steamboat race? At the same time, it looks as if a legless race would be a great boom for politics."

"How so?"

Intelligence and the Suffrage.

Symonds—So you object to woman suffrage. I should like to know upon what grounds, if you have any reasonable ones.

Belcher—I've heard more than a hundred women say the men are all alike. With such an idea in their heads, how can you expect an intelligent use of the suffrage from them?—Boston Transcript.

Of Course They Do.

Hixon—Do you believe that man originally sprang from the monkey?

Dixon—No; but I believe that all women spring from mice.—Chicago News.

CUPOLA OF ST. PETER'S.

Its Outline Remains an Unparalleled Idea In Architecture.

The greatest of the architectural enterprises Michael Angelo was called upon to take up was the completing of St. Peter's, and he devoted himself through pure obedience to this task, refusing all compensation, offering his unpaid services in that way both to his master and to the service of religion.

He had to struggle against the opposing ideas of the architects in charge of the monument, who held by later plans than those of the first deviser, and their enmity and misapprehension of what was best aimed at a continual thwarting of all his intentions. He managed, however, to bring back the building to its original plan, that of his greatest enemy, Bramante, upon whom he has left this noble judgment. "It cannot be denied," said he, "that Bramante laid the first plan of St. Peter's clear and simple, and all who have departed from his scheme have departed from the truth."

We have not the great cathedral as Michael wished it, nor can we see in it the creation of his genius. But the one thing that Michael Angelo left to his successors in the work is the cupola, whose outline remains as an unparalleled idea, as important a landmark in architecture as his other records of achievement in painting and sculpture. It is the mark of Rome and the expression of Rome's grandeur.—John La Farge in McClure's.

The Pelican Smiled.

There is a sly old pelican in Central park which has an almost human way of noticing what goes on about him without seeming to do so. The other day two herons in the same cage with him fought over a fish. One had made the catch, but the other had undertaken to wrest the morsel from its rightful possessor.

They squabbled over it like two boys who have hold of the same baseball bat. The scuffle brought them into the neighborhood of the old pelican, who stood, apparently asleep, with his big bill tucked away under a wing. Then the heron dropped its fish, and the battle went on.

No sooner had it been dropped than the great bill came out from underneath the wing and the fish went into the pelican's pouch. Then the head disappeared again. The pelican was plainly asleep.

When one heron gave up the fight and flew away, the other looked about for the prize. It was nowhere to be seen. The keeper of the bird cages solemnly asserts that he saw a twinkle in the eye which the pelican opened to give a glance at the retreating heron.—New York Times.

Peculiar Roses.

One of the wars of the roses, the fiercest and deadliest of them all, was fought on a field where, curiously enough, a rose peculiar to the spot grows or used to grow. It is a rare plant now, and the reason is explained by Mr. Leadman in his account of Yorkshire battles. After describing the terrible battle at Towton on Palm Sunday, 1461, he says: "I cannot conclude this story of Towton field without an allusion to the little dwarf bushes peculiar to the 'Field of the White Rose and the Red.'

"They are said to have been plentiful at the commencement of this century, but the visitors have taken them away in such numbers that they have become rare. Such vandalism is simply shameful, for the plants are said to be unique and unable to exist in any other soil. The little roses are white, with a red spot on the center of each of their petals, and as they grow old the under surface becomes a dull red color."—London News.

Cave Animals.

No animals whatever are found in the dry parts of caves. Dampness or a certain degree of moisture seems to be essential to their existence. Under the stones one finds white, eyeless worms, and in the damp soil all around about are to be discovered blind beetles in little holes which they excavate and bugs of the thousand leg sort. These thousand leg bugs, which in the upper world devour fragments of dead leaves and other vegetable debris, sustain life in the caverns by feeding upon decayed wood, fungous growths and bats' dung. Kneeling in a beaten path one can see numbers of them gathered about hardened drips of tallow from tourists' candles. There are plenty of crickets also.

A Varnishing Tip.

When varnishing wood, the work must be done in a warm room at a temperature of at least 75 degrees F. At a lower temperature the moisture in the air will give a milky and cloudy appearance to the varnish. On the other hand, at the higher temperature the moisture is not precipitated until the alcohol of the varnish has sufficiently evaporated to leave a thin smooth film of shellac. The durability and gloss are dependent on this.

OUR CONSCIENCE FUND.

It was Started With a Dollar In the Year 1811.

"In the year 1811," says H. E. Armstrong in Ainslee's Magazine, "an anonymous citizen of New York sent a dollar to the treasury department at Washington with an avowal that he had defrauded the government and wanted to make restoration. A dollar meant something to Uncle Sam in those necessitous days when the country verged on war with Great Britain, and it was a patriotic as well as a penitent act. The contributor was the founder of the conscience fund, and probably he died in the odor of sanctity.

"During the preceding thirty-five years of the life of the republic no one had despoiled the government, or the private conscience was callous. This New York man, indeed, seems to have been the one blemish on a golden era of national virtues, for fifty years were to elapse before there was an addition to the fund.

"In 1861, just after Sumter was fired on, the sum of $6,000 in bonds was received by the treasury department, with a letter explaining that a sorely tried conscience could no longer endure its burden of guilt. The plain inference was that the sender, realizing the United States would need a mint of money to carry on the war, judged it not to be a time to defer repentance. Think of the bounty jumpers who profited by his contribution!

"It was really useful to the country in another way. The conscience fund, which had languished for want of a shining example, now became active. It has been quoted pretty steadily ever since. At the present time it amounts to more than $300,000. Indeed, restitution is getting to be the fashion, and the time may come when no one will take advantage of the government or do so only with the laudable design of swelling the conscience fund when any emergency confronts Uncle Sam."

HOME NOTES.

Try adding a tablespoonful of kerosene to a pail of clear hot water to wash the windows.

One or two good sized mirrors in brass or gilt frames will do much to lighten a dark hall or room.

To clean cut glass wash articles, let them dry afterward, rub them with prepared chalk and a soft brush, carefully going into all the cavities.

To make a mahogany table shine like a mirror dip a woolen cloth into a tablespoonful of vinegar mixed with three of pure linseed oil and rub vigorously.

Lemon peel (and also orange) should be all saved and dried. It is a capital substitute for kindling wood. A handful will revive a dying fire and at the same time delicately perfume a room.

To renovate black satin ribbon heat some ale, and in it steep the ribbon for some time. After rinsing the ribbon iron it while wet between two cloths, and it will be stiff and glossy like new.

In sponging out bureau drawers and those of sideboards use tepid water containing a 1 per cent solution of carbolic acid, or, if preferred, use a small quantity of thymene in the tepid water instead of the acid.

Consistency.

They had been married but two months. He came home one evening to find his wife in tears. She had found an old scrapbook of his in which were pasted some poems he had written to some one else and published in the college papers. "I thought," she said, "you had never loved any one but me." And he promptly reassured her that she had thought truly, and burned up his old scrapbook in the furnace in the basement.

And the next day he found that she had distributed on the mantel and the dresser not less than five photographs of as many former beaux of hers and invited two of them who were in town to dinner the next Sunday.—St. Louis Mirror.

Twins, but Not Alike.

Two gentlemen were noticed at a New York clubhouse—one was the picture of prime middle age—the other had a crutch and cane and looked fifteen years older—they both had caught Rheumatism from over-exposure some ten years before—one took Ath-lo-pho-ros and was entirely cured—the other had spent thousands of dollars with Doctors, Sanitariums, German Baths, etc.—meantime his brother enjoys life, and Ath-lo-pho-ros goes on curing. The Ath-lo-pho-ros formula was originally the prescription of one of the world's greatest doctors and is known to have cured over fifty thousand people—it relieves almost every case, and one bottle will show improvement if any is to be had from it.

Question Answered.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Get Green's Prize Almanac at J. J. Orr's.

OIL LAMP VICTIMS

Two Women in the State Die of Burns Received.

BOTH DIED IN GREAT AGONY

Mrs. Klaas Dykama of Holland and Mrs. Joseph Barringer of Eau Claire Were the Unfortunates—Former Woman's Husband and Son Burned.

Holland, Mich., Jan. 30.—Mrs. Klaas Dykema was fatally burned early yesterday morning. She was trying to put out a hanging kerosene lamp when the chain by which it hung broke and the lamp fell to the floor, exploding instantly.

Mrs. Dykema was covered with burning oil. Her husband and son both rushed to the rescue, but in their excitement they tried to put out the flames with their hands. The woman was burned almost to a crisp before the flames were extinguished by the use of a blanket. She died at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. Dykema and his son were badly burned about the head and the arms.

Benton Harbor, Mich., Jan. 30.—Mrs. Joseph Barringer of Eau Claire was burned to death in the most horrible lamp explosion known in this county last night. Her two children were sitting under a table cutting pictures from a magazine, when they arose, knocking the lamp from the table. It exploded, throwing oil and flames over Mrs. Barringer. She ran to the street, leaving a trail of fire behind her. When help first arrived the flesh was falling from her hands. The children escaped unharmed, but the house was considerably damaged by the fire.

DETROIT NEXT YEAR.

Selection Made by Masonic Grand Lodge for Next Meeting.

Muskegon, Mich., Jan. 30.—The grand lodge of Masons yesterday afternoon selected Detroit as the place of meeting in 1903. Grand Treasurer Wente then distributed to the delegates their per diem and mileage, amounting to $6,500, and the delegates left for their homes.

As intimated, the old officers were all advanced a peg, Neal McMillan of Rockford, United States consul at Sarnia, being elected grand commander. Erastus E. Stone of Saginaw got the grand marshalship, the only office for which there was any contest.

Maniac Is Still at Large.

Kalamazoo, Mich., Jan. 30.—The asylum authorities have about given up all hopes of ever getting trace of Frank Bolt, the inmate of the institution who was terrorizing southern Michigan during the past two weeks. Since the publication of his escapades they have entirely ceased, and no news of the man can be secured. He is thought to be more criminal than insane.

A Valuable Invention.

Owosso, Mich., Jan. 30.—Dr. E. F. Jeanjacquet, a Swiss, who recently moved here from Detroit, has an invention which local jewelers consider worth a fortune. It is a device for cutting out watch wheels, and the secret is guarded carefully. The old man claims his house has twice been entered in an attempt to secure possession of it. Local capital may help the old man to a manufacturing plant.

State May Save $20,000.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 30.—Gov. Bliss and Major Ralph Stone have obtained permission from the state auditors to send Col. W. D. McDonald to Washington to explain items aggregating some $20,000 in Michigan's Spanish war claim. The quartermaster's department is inclined to allow these items, but has requested an explanation from some one familiar with all the details.

Senate Waxed Warm in Arguments Yesterday.

OVER THE PHILIPPINE BILL

Senators Lost Their Dignity—Became Personal in Their Remarks—Spooner and Tillman Held a Hot Race Discussion.

Washington, Jan. 29.—A Philippine storm was central in the senate chamber yesterday for nearly three hours, but was void of definite results. At times it looked very serious and the spectators who thronged the galleries watched it with breathless interest.

Acrimony in senate debates is not infrequent, but old senators say it has been years since there has been such a hurricane of bitter vituperation, of personal taunt, of ugly charges and of unmodified criticism as was witnessed. Not since the discussion of the resolutions leading up to the Hispano-American war have any scenes occurred in the senate comparable with yesterday. Even that debate lacked the personal bitterness manifested at all times yesterday. Irritation was aroused on both sides of the chamber and once or twice personal encounters between senators seemed imminent. Once when Senator Teller taunted the republican senators by declaring they knew the statements made in a recent dispatch from Manila, in which Gen. Wheaton was reported as criticizing the opponents of the government's policy in the Philippines were true, a half dozen republicans were on their feet in an instant. Senator Lodge, at whom the taunt seemed to be aimed, particularly, crossed from his seat in the center of the republican side to the main aisle of the senate and, white to the lips, passionately challenged the statement of the Colorado senator and demanded that he withdraw it. Senator Teller so modified the statement that further hostilities at that time were averted.

One of the sharpest colloquies of the session was between Senators Spooner of Wisconsin and Tillman of South Carolina. The race problem, involving the lynching of negroes, was interjected into the controversy and much feeling was manifested by both senators. In the course of the colloquy, Mr. Spooner declared that if the same rule were to be applied to the colored people in the Philippines as Mr. Tillman referred to in the south, then "God help the colored man in the Philippines."

"God help him in the Philippines now," shouted the South Carolina senator, passionately. "You have already butchered in three years three times as many as the Spaniards did in three centuries."

"It is one thing," retorted Spooner, "to kill men with arms in their hands against the government and against the flag. It is another to burn them."

Senators in their excitement seemed for the moment to have forgotten the subject of debate. The chair (Mr. Frye) was able with difficulty to maintain order. When the discussion finally was ended for the day, the chair felt called upon seriously to admonish senators that the rules of the body had not been observed, and after reading the rule which had been violated, he expressed the hope that in the future senators would have a care to observe it.

New Department's Duties.

Washington, Jan. 29.—Senator Nelson's bill creating a department of commerce, which passed the senate yesterday, was amended in various particulars. Probably the most important of the amendments was one changing the title to read, the department of commerce and labor. It provides for a secretary who is to be a member of the cabinet, an assistant secretary and also the other officials and clerks necessary. The proposed department is especially charged with the collection and distribution of statistical information and with the development and fostering of foreign and domestic commerce. In the department there is to be a new bureau of manufactures, and many bureaus now included in the other departments are transferred to this new department, including the life-saving service, the lighthouse service, the marine hospital service, the steamboat inspection service and the bureaus of navigation, of shipping and of emigration, as well as the control of the fisheries and the Chinese exclusion questions, all now within the jurisdiction of the treasury deparement; the fish commission and the census bureau. The department also is given jurisdiction over the consular service so far as it pertains to commerce.

Counterfeit Suspends Business.

San Juan, Porto Rico, Jan. 29.—Gov. Hunt has cabled to the treasury department at Washington asking an expert be sent here to settle the counterfeit question at Ponce, where $3,000 in bogus silver was recently seized. Business there is practically suspended. The merchants of Ponce are refusing to accept any silver coins of the dates of 1898, 1899, 1900 and 1901. The counterfeit dollars are poorly executed but the alleged spurious halves and quarters defy detection. They are, apparently, of the full weight. The bankers here have examined samples of the silver from Ponce and say the coins are good. There are no experts here or at Ponce.

Wants President to Choose.

Washington, Jan. 29.—Just before the adjournment of the senate yesterday Senator Spooner introduced a substitute for the Nicaragua canal bill. The new bill is a practical authorization to the president of the United States to choose between the Panama and the Nicaragua routes.

Detroit Wants a Peep.

Washington, Jan. 30.—Although Prince Henry's itinerary contemplates a flying trip from Buffalo to Chicago, Senator McMillan is trying to have him make the trip by way of Detroit and the Michigan Central instead of Cleveland. At the state department it was stated that the Detroit route would probably be selected.

A FIGHT FOR LIFE

Ohio Officers Corner and Kill Two Robbers.

FIERCE BATTLE TOOK PLACE

Had Planned to Rob a House, but Were Betrayed by Confidants—Officers Also Received Severe Injuries.

Gallipolis, O., Jan. 30.—Two burglars and cracksmen are dead, Deputy Sheriff W. S. Mannering is seriously wounded and Marshal Peter Fintzenwald of Athens is perhaps mortally wounded, as the result of an attempt to rob Mrs. Mary Priest, an aged lady.

The dead robbers were known as Harvey Williams and John Lysle. They had been leaders of a gang which has committed many burglaries in this section.

Mrs. Priest, whom the men had planned to rob, lives with a maid and nephew as her only companions. Several attempts to rob her have been thwarted. As a precaution she had her money and valuables removed from the big iron safe in the basement of her house to a place of greater security.

Several weeks ago Sheriff Murphy of Athens county received information that plans had been laid to rob the house and that the robbers had taken a man named Bob Sweet into their confidence. The sheriff persuaded Sweet and a blacksmith named Weldon Kyle to learn the plans for the robbery and to assist him in foiling them. Sheriff Murphy and Marshal Fitzgerald of Athens arrived here yesterday afternoon and arranged with Sheriff McDaniel of this county to entrap the robbers. The two decoys were to accompany the robbers and assist in the capture.

The robbers reached the Priest house early last evening and immediately on entering began to fire their revolvers, according to a prearranged plan, to terrorize the household. The decoys remained in the rear, masked so the officers could identify them. A fusillade followed and Sweet and Kyle joined the officers. The criminals made a fierce fight and were riddled with bullets before they sank to the floor dead.

Marshal Finsterwalr of Athens was shot over the heart and in the right arm and Deputy Sheriff Mayoung received a bullet in the right arm and hip. The condition of the Athens marshal is critical.

PRESS IS FREE.

Senate Discussed Philippine Censorship of the Press.

Washington, Jan. 30.—For an hour yesterday the senate had under discussion the question whether a censorship of press dispatches exists in Manila. While no such turbulent scenes as Tuesday's were enacted, the debate for a time was very spirited. The secretary of war was quoted as saying that no press censorship now existed in the Philippines and a letter from Gen. Greely, chief signal officer of the army, was presented by Mr. Beveridge of Indiana, making the statement officially that there was no censorship of press dispatches and "that the press is entirely free." It was contended by the opposition that a press censorship did exist in the Philippines and that copies of every news dispatch filed with the cable company was filed with the military authorities. That, it was maintained, constituted an extended and carefully prepared speech on the history of the reciprocity negotiations.

The house adjourned after being in session 25 minutes. Mr. Hopkins (Ill.) reported the permanent census bill and gave notice that he would call it up today. A request to make the oleomargarine bill a special order for next Monday was objected to on the democratic side.

Revolutionary Fleet Ousted.

Panama, Colombia, Jan. 30.—The Columbian government fleet, consisting of the steamers Boyaca and Chucuito and the armed launch Gen. Campo, which left here Tuesday to make an attempt to break the blockade of Agua Dulce, where the revolutionary fleet was last seen, and to communicate with Gen. Castro, the Colombian commander, met the insurgent steamer Padilla at Yeguala, 30 miles from Panama, at 1 o'clock that afternoon and opened fire on her. The revolutionary steamers Darien and Gaitan appeared on the scene soon after the engagement began. The fire of the Chucuito was so well directed that it caused the revolutionary fleet to draw in towards the shore, where the enemy's ships were protected by land batteries. The Chucuito and Boyaca then retired, unmolested, and arrived here at 5 p. m. The Gen. Campo was not engaged. The forces of Gen. Herrera, the revolutionary commander, are at San Carlos, 40 miles from Panama.

PROGRESSIVE YEAR

Grand Masonic Lodge Officers Make Annual Report

OVER 1,500 NEW MEMBERS

Grand Lodge is Now in Session at Muskegon—Complete Financial Returns Made for the First Time by All State Lodges.

Muskegon, Mich., Jan. 29.—The preliminary session of the grand lodge of Masons of Michigan was held yesterday with nearly 600 members in attendance. The grand lodge convened at high noon in the opera house with Grand Master Frank O. Gilbert of Bay City in the chair. In behalf of the mayor the Hon. H. J. Hoyt made an address of welcome, and the grand master responded.

On reconvening at 3:30 p. m. Grand Master Gilbert delivered his annual address. He stated that during the year new masonic lodges had been established at Coleman, Montrose and Middleton. On his recommendation, the masonic laws, which were published several years ago, and have been revised and recompiled by the Hon. John W. McGrath of Detroit, were referred to the committee on jurisprudence for consideration and report.

The report of the grand secretary, Jefferson S. Conover of Coldwater, showed that for the first time in the history of the grand lodge, every lodge in the state had made their returns and had paid their dues in full. During the past year 2,496 master Masons had been created. The deaths in the various lodges numbered 700. The total membership was 45,209, an increase of 1,518 in a year. The cash receipts for the year were $22,995.90, the largest in the history of the grand lodge.

Grand Lecturer L. B. Winsor of Reed City reported holding the largest number of schools of instruction ever held in a single year before, and recommended the continuance of the plan until every lodge had been visited once. The grand lecturer also submitted a report on the condition of the Masonic home.

Several changes were made in the standing committees. On the jurisprudence committee Frank T. Lodge of Detroit was appointed in place of Hugh McCurdy of Corunna. On the finance committee Allen McKee of Manistee will replace John J. Flood of West Bay City, and James H. Kerr of Alpena replaces William H. Mcgregor of Detroit.

This morning at 9:30 o'clock the grand lodge reconvened for the election of officers. Grand Master Gilbert will retire, and according to custom the other officers will all be moved up a notch. This will leave a vacancy in the grand marshalship, for which there will be a spirited contest. There are some six candidates in the field, among them being F. E. Morton of Allegan, E. E. Stone of Saginaw and P. O. Holthe of this city.

SHE BROKE THE RULE.

President of Kalamazoo Bachelor Girl Club Got Married.

Kalamazoo, Mich., Jan. 29.—By the announcement of the marriage next Thursday of Miss Mabel Clare Mills of this city, daughter of Mayor and Mrs. A. J. Mills, to Edmund W. Chase, a well-known young business man, the Tattlers' club loses its president and prime mover.

The organization was formed three years ago by 20 of the leading society girls of the city, who decided to play pedro all alone and subsist without male attention. Six of the members, however, have already succumbed to the entanglements of matrimony, and the others have made merry at their expense. Miss Mills's loss will be a hard blow, however, as the club may now go to pieces. Miss Mills had invited all the members of the club to act as bridesmaids at the ceremony, which will be one of the swellest society events in Kalamazoo for several years.

Mather's Case Hopeless.

Niles, Mich., Jan. 29.—The family of James S. Mather, at Elkhart, Ind., has just been notified by Superintendent Rogers of Long Cliff asylum, that there will never be any permanent improvement in his condition. Mather recently confessed that he murdered a man by the name of Olson at Muskegon, Mich., in September, 1875. Chief of Police Gereghty of Muskegon visited Mather Monday and after a long interview with him told Dr. Rogers that the Michigan authorities would never do anything regarding the Olson murder unless Mather was dismissed as cured, or escaped. Mather told the same story to Geraghty that he did to the Elkhart police, except that he insisted that he killed Olson in self-defense.

MICHIGAN BRIEFS.

POPE'S RELATIVE

Omaha, Jan. 30.—Sister Mary Constance Bentivoglio, mother superior of the Omaha convent of St. Claire and relative of Pope Leo, died yesterday at the monastery of pneumonia after two weeks' illness. Sixty-four years ago the sister was born in the castle of St. Angelo at Rome, while her father was governor of the Italian capital. She was a descendant of the famous house of Bentivoglio, and one of her brothers, Count Ventivoglio, is prominent among Italian noblemen of today. Her father was a native of Bologna, Italy, and her relatives are still in Europe, with the exception of Sister Magdalene, who is mother superior of the monastery at Evansville, Ind., a branch of the Omaha monastery.

Died Defending the Money.

Chicago, Jan. 30.—Horace Schroeder, 17 years old, was found dead face downward with a bullet hole in his heart yesterday on the floor of D. C. Burns's grocery store, Sacramento avenue and Lexington street. Beneath the body was found a bag of coins and bills, the change used in the grocery. Near by lay a revolver, four chambers of which had recently been emptied. The boy worked for Burns and it was his duty to open the place of business each morning. Two bullet holes through the window of the store and a number of holes in the woodwork and showcases indicated that the boy had defended the property from robbers with his life.

Amphiteatroff, heretofore chief editorial writer, has been exiled to Irkutsk.

ONE OF MANY VICTIMS.

Such Was Hooker, Believes Farrington Murder Prosecution.

Adrian, Mich., Jan. 30.—The first part of the morning session of the Farrington trial was taken up in the securing of the twelfth juror, 11 having been accepted by both sides the day before. The attorneys questioned no less than 61 persons drawn for prospective jurors before the requisite number could be agreed on. Finally at 10:15 the jury was secured.

The issue was squarely raised between the defense and the prosecution as to whether Jesse Hooker was led astray by Mrs. Farrington, or Mrs. Farrington fell a victim to the designs of Hooker. The theory of the prosecution is that Mrs. Farrington was a woman who had improper relations with many men, and whose loose life had been known to her husband for a long time. Hooker was only one of many that had fallen under her influence. The defense, on the contrary, will hold that Hooker was the cause of the destruction of Farrington's home, and that Farrington, when he shot Hooker, killed the seducer of his wife and destroyer of his home.

When court convened in the afternoon Prosecutor Sampson made a very full statement of what the prosecution proposed to show.

Chester E. Hooker, father of Jesse Hooker, told how Farrington came to him and asked him to tell his son to keep away from Mrs. Farrington. He did so, but his son gave him no definite reply. He informed Farrington that Jesse was of age.

He told Mrs. Farrington to keep away from the house, and told his son she must keep away, but it was because he could not afford the expense of keeping her. She had been there up to the time of the shooting since New Year's eve.

THE COURIER OF THE CZAR

By Jules Verne

CHAPTER XVI.

No special incident marked this journey on the lake.

Nadia had remained in a profound stupor.

Sleep had only overpowered Michael Strogoff at long intervals, and still his thoughts were ever watching over her.

At daybreak the raft, retarded by a somewhat strong breeze which was blowing against the action of the current, was still forty versts from the mouth of the Angara. Most likely they would not be able to reach it before 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

This was not an inconvenience; rather the contrary, for the fugitives would then descend the river during the night, and the darkness would favor their arrival at Irkutsk.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the mouth of the Angara was signaled by the old mariner between the high granite rocks of the coast. One could perceive on the right bank the little port of Liveniitchnaia, its church, its few houses built on the steep.

But there was a grave circumstance. The first floating ice that had come from the east was already forming between the banks of the Angara and hence descending toward Irkutsk.

However, their number could not as yet be great enough to obstruct the river nor the cold severe enough to unite them into one mass.

The raft arrived at the little port and stopped there for a short time. The old mariner had decided to put into port for an hour in order to make some indispensable repairs. The trunks, having become loose, threatened to separate from one another, and it was of great importance to rebind them more firmly together that they might resist the current of the Angara, which is very rapid.

The old sailor did not, therefore, expect any more fugitives at the port of Livenitchnaia, and yet at the moment the raft was leaving the shore two men, coming out of a deserted house, ran with great haste to the bank.

Nadia, sitting at the back part of the raft, looked at them in a listless manner.

A cry was about to escape her. She seized the hand of Michael Strogoff, who at that moment raised his head.

"What is the matter with you, Nadia?" he asked.

"Our two fellow travelers, Michael—that Frenchman and that Englishman whom we met in the defiles of the Ural mountains."

"Yes."

Michael Strogoff shuddered, for the strict incognito from which he did not wish to depart was in danger of being unveiled.

And in reality it was not any longer Nicholas Korpanoff whom Alcide Jolivet and Harry Blount were about to see in him now, but the true Michael Strogoff, the courier of the czar. The journalists had already met him twice since their separation at the posthouse of Ichim—the first time at the [illegible] of Zabedeiro, when he cut with the blow of the knout the face of Ivan Ogareff, the second time at Tomsk, when he was condemned by the emir. They knew therefore what to think of him and his true position as courier of the czar.

Michael Strogoff quickly took up his part.

"Nadia," said he, "when that Frenchman and Englishman shall come on board beg them to come up to me."

They were indeed Harry Blount and Alcide Jolivet, whom not chance, but the force of events, had conducted to the port of Livenitchnaia, just as they had led Michael Strogoff.

The reader knows that after having been present at the triumphal entry of the Tartars into Tomsk they had gone away before the savage execution which terminated the feast. They had no doubt but their old fellow traveler had been put to death, and they were quite unaware that he had been only made blind by order of the emir.

Then, having procured horses, they had abandoned Tomsk that very night, with the fixed intention of dating henceforth their articles from Russian camps of eastern Siberia.

Alcide Jolivet and Harry Blount set out for Irkutsk by forced marches. They had great hopes of outstripping Feofar-Khan, and most certainly they would have done so had not a third column unexpectedly made its appearance, having come from the southern provinces of the Yenisei. Like Michael Strogoff, they were cut off before having even reached the Dinka. Hence they were again compelled to go down as far as Lake Baikal.

When they arrived at Livenitchnaia, the port was already deserted. On any other side it was impossible for them to enter Irkutsk, which was invested by the Tartar armies.

They had been there for three days, and very much embarrassed, when the raft arrived.

The design of the fugitives was communicated to them. There was certainly some chance of their being able to pass during the night and penetrate into Irkutsk. They therefore resolved to make the attempt.

Alcide Jolivet at once placed himself in communication with the old mariner and asked passage for his companion and himself, offering to pay the fare he fixed, whatever it might be.

"Here one does not pay anything," gravely answered the old mariner. "One risks his life; that is all."

The two journalists embarked, and Nadia saw them take their place in the fore part of the raft.

Harry Blount was always the cold Englishman who had scarcely addressed a word to her during the whole journey across the Ural mountains. Alcide Jolivet seemed a little more grave than usual, and one would acknowledge that his gravity was justified by that of the circumstances.

Alcide Jolivet was then installed on the fore part of the raft, when he felt a hand rest on his arm. He turned round and recognized Nadia, the sister of him who was no longer Nicholas Korpanoff, but Michael Strogoff, courier of the czar. A cry of surprise was about to escape him when he saw the young girl place her finger on her lips.

"Come," said Nadia to him.

And, assuming an air of indifference, Alcide Jolivet, making a sign to Harry Blount to accompany him, followed her.

But if the surprise of the journalists was great at meeting Nadia on that raft it was without limits when they perceived Michael Strogoff, whom they could not believe to be still alive. Michael Strogoff had not moved at their approach.

Alcide Jolivet had turned himself toward the young girl.

"Gentlemen, he does not see you," said the young girl. "The Tartars have burned out his eyes! My poor brother is blind!"

A deep feeling of pity was pictured on the face of Alcide Jolivet and his companion.

An instant afterward both of them, seated near Michael Strogoff, warmly shook his hands and waited for him to speak.

"Gentlemen," said Michael Strogoff in a low voice, "you must not know who I am nor what I came to do in Siberia. I beg you to respect my secret. Do you promise me?"

"On my honor," answered Alcide Jolivet.

"On my faith as a gentleman," added Harry Blount.

"Very well, gentlemen."

"Can we be of any use to you?" asked Harry Blount. "Would you wish us to help you to accomplish your task?"

"I prefer to act alone," said Michael Strogoff.

"But those scoundrels have burned out your sight," said Alcide Jolivet.

"I have Nadia, and her eyes suffice."

Half an hour later the raft, after having left the little port of Livenitchnaia, was fairly in the river. It was 5 o'clock in the evening. Night was fast coming on. It would be very dark and very cold also, for the temperature was already below zero.

Alcide Jolivet and Harry Blount, although they had promised Michael Strogoff to keep his secret, yet did not leave his side. They spoke in a low voice, and the blind man, putting what he already knew to what they now told him, was enabled to form an exact idea of the state of affairs.

He was certain that the Tartars were actually investing Irkutsk and that the three columns had already formed a junction. One could not therefore doubt that the emir and Ivan Ogareff were before the capital.

But why that haste to arrive there of the courier of the czar, now that the emperor's letter could no longer be remitted by him to the grand duke, and he did not even know its contents? Alcide Jolivet and Harry Blount could no more understand than could Nadia.

Besides, they had not spoken of the past up to the moment when Alcide Jolivet thought it his duty to say to Michael Strogoff:

"We almost owe you some excuses for not having shaken hands with you before our separation at the posthouse of Ichim."

"No; you had a right to believe me a coward."

"Anyhow," added Alcide Jolivet, "you have splendidly whipped that villain, and he will carry the marks of it a long time."

"No, not a long time," simply answered Michael Strogoff.

In half an hour after the departure from Livenitchnaia Alcide Jolivet and Harry Blount had heard all the details of the cruel trials through which Michael Strogoff and his companion had successively passed. They could not but openly admire an energy which the devotedness of the young girl alone had been able to equal. And of Michael Strogoff they had formed the very same opinion which had been so well expressed by the czar at Moscow—"In truth, he is a man!"

At 8 o'clock at night, as the aspect of the sky had forewarned them, an excessive darkness enveloped all the country. The moon, being new, would not rise above the horizon. From the middle of the river the banks were visible. The cliffs at not a great height were blended with those heavy clouds which they displaced with difficulty. At intervals a breeze would come from the east and seem to expire in that narrow valley of the Angara.

The old mariner, lying down on the fore part of the raft near his men, occupied himself altogether in turning aside from the ice blocks, a maneuver which he executed without making any noise.

This drifting of the ice, after all, was a favorable circumstance as long as it did not oppose an insurmountable obstacle in the passage of the raft; for indeed this apparatus alone on the free waters of the river would have run the risk of being perceived even through the thick shade, whereas it was now confounded with these moving masses of all sizes and all shapes, and the din produced by the grating of the blocks drowned all other suspicious noise.

There was a very keen frost. The fugitives suffered dreadfully from it, not having any other shelter but some branches of the birch tree. They pressed close to each other in order to better support the low temperature, which during that night had reached 10 degrees below zero.

Michael Strogoff and Nadia, lying down at the back part of the raft, endured without complaint this additional suffering. For a man who was reckoning soon to attain his end Michael Strogoff seemed singularly calm. Besides, in the most grave situations his energy had never abandoned him. Already he looked forward to the moment when at last it would be permitted him to think of his mother, of Nadia, of himself. He only feared one last and evil chance. It was lest the raft should be absolutely stopped by a barrier of thick ice before having reached Irkutsk. He did not think of anything but that, being, moreover, decided if it were necessary to attempt some supreme act of daring.

Nadia, refreshed by some hours of repose, had recovered that physical energy which misery had sometimes been able to subdue without ever having shaken her moral energy. She was thinking also that in case Michael Strogoff should make a new effort to attain his end she must be there to guide him. But at the time that she was approaching Irkutsk the image of her father was pictured more vividly in her mind. She saw him in the invested town, far from those he cherished, but—for she did not doubt it—struggling against the invaders with all the dash of his patriotism. Before many hours, if heaven should at length favor them, she would be in his arms, reciting to him the last words of her mother, and nothing should again separate them.

The raft still moved on, unperceived, amid the mass of floating ice.

Up to this time no Tartar detachment had been signaled on the high banks of the Angara, and this indicated that the raft had not as yet come on a line with their outposts.

Meanwhile it was necessary to maneuver with more care in the midst of the ice, which was fast closing.

The old mariner rose up, and the mujiks took up again their boathooks. All had as much as they could do, and the management of the raft became more and more difficult, for the [illegible] of the river was becoming obstructed.

Alcide Jolivet had followed him.

Both listened to what the old sailor and his men were saying.

"Guard there on the right!"

"Look! The blocks of ice are thickening on the left!"

"Keep it off! Keep it off with your boathook!"

"Before an hour we shall be stopped!"

"If God wills it!" replied the old sailor. "Against his will nothing can be done."

"You hear them?" said Alcide Jolivet.

"Yes," replied Michael Strogoff, "but God is with us."

Meantime the situation became more and more serious. If the raft once ceased to make headway, the fugitives would not only never reach Irkutsk, but they would be obliged to abandon their floating apparatus, which, crushed by the ice blocks, would not be long in sinking under the waters. The willow bindings were already breaking, the fir trunks, violently separated, were becoming entangled under the hard crust, and soon the unfortunate people would have no other refuge than the ice itself. Then, when daylight should come, they would be perceived by the Tartars and massacred without pity.

Michael Strogoff returned to the back part of the raft, where Nadia was waiting for him. He approached the young girl, he took her hand and put to her that invariable question. "Nadia, are you ready?" to which she answered as usual:

"I am ready."

For some versts more the raft continued to make its way through the floating ice. If the Angara should be choked up with ice, it would form a barrier, and consequently it would be impossible to follow the current. Already the passage down the river was slower. At every instant there were collisions, or time was lost by having to make long turnings. Here they must escape landing on the ice; there they must take a narrow pass between it—in fine, many anxious drawbacks.

And now only a few hours of the night remained. If the fugitives did not reach Irkutsk before 5 o'clock in the morning, they must give up all hope of ever entering there.

At length, at half past 1, in spite of all their united efforts, the raft struck against a thick barrier and stopped altogether. The ice which was floating down the river cast itself upon it and forced it against the obstacle and held it motionless as if it had been driven upon a reef.

At this place the Angara becomes narrowed to not more than half its normal breadth; hence the accumulation of ice blocks, which were by little and little piled one upon another under the action of the double pressure, which was considerable, and of the cold, whose intensity was redoubling. At 500 paces down the river again became wide, and ice blocks, detaching themselves by little and little from the lower edge of that field, continued to float down to Irkutsk; hence it is probable that without that narrowing of the banks the barrier would not have been formed, and the raft could have continued to descend the current. But the evil was irreparable, and the fugitives had to give up all hope of reaching the end of their journey. If they had had at their disposal the tools which the whalers usually employ to open out canals across the icefields, if they had been able to cut this field as far as the place where the river became wider, perhaps the time would not have been wanting, but not a single saw, not a pickax, nothing with which to cut the crust, which the extreme cold had rendered as hard as granite.

What should they do?

At that moment rifle shots were heard on the right bank of the Angara. A shower of bullets was directed upon the raft. Had the unhappy men been perceived? Evidently, for other detonations resounded on the left bank. The fugitives, caught between two fires, became a target for the Tartar marksmen. Some were wounded by these balls, although in the midst of the great darkness they only fell by chance.

"Come, Nadia," whispered Michael Strogoff in the ear of the young girl.

Without making any observation, ready for everything, Nadia took the hand of Michael Strogoff.

"I am thinking of crossing the barrier," he said to her in a low voice. "Guide me, but let no one see us leave the raft."

Nadia obeyed. Michael Strogoff and she glided quickly over the surface of the icefield in a silence that was broken here and there by the firing.

Nadia crept on in front of Michael Strogoff. The balls fell around them like a shower of hailstones and crashed upon the ice. The surface of the field, rugged and with sharp edges, made their hands bleed, but still they kept advancing.

Ten minutes afterward the lower border of the barrier was reached. There the waters of the Angara again became free. A few large blocks of ice, becoming by degrees detached from the field and floating with the current, descended toward the town.

Nadia understood what Michael Strogoff wished to attempt. She saw one of those blocks of ice that was only held by a narrow tongue.

"Come," said Nadia.

And both lay down on this morsel of ice, which a slight rocking loosened from the barrier.

The block began to make its way down the river. The river itself became wider, and the route was free.

Michael Strogoff and Nadia could hear the firing of guns, the cries of distress, the shouts of the Tartars that made themselves heard up the river. Then little by little those cries of deep anguish and of ferocious joy were lost in the distance.

"Oh, those poor companions!" whispered Nadia.

For half an hour the current quickly carried along the block of ice which was bearing Michael Strogoff and Nadia. At every moment they feared that they might sink under the water. Being caught in the stream, it followed the middle of the river, and it would not be necessary to give it an oblique direction until there was question of making for the quays of Irkutsk.

Michael Strogoff, with his teeth set and his ears ready to catch the least sound, did not utter a single word. Never was he so near attaining his end. He felt that he was about to succeed.

Toward 2 o'clock in the morning a double row of lights lit up the somber horizon on the two banks of the Angara.

"At last!" whispered he.

But suddenly Nadia gave a cry.

At that cry Michael Strogoff rose up from the block, which became very unsteady. His hand stretched out toward the head of the Angara. His face, all lit up with the reflections of blue lights, became terrible to look at, and then, as though his eyes had been reopened to the light, he cried:

"Ah, God himself is against us!"

HOME AND CHILD

Does your horse "feel his oats"? What a difference between the grain-fed and the grass-fed horse! The first strong and full of ginger, the second flabby, weak and tired out before he begins. The feeding makes the difference.

Children are not alike either. One is rosy, bright-eyed, full of life and laughter, another is pale, weak and dull. The feeding again is responsible.

Scott's Emulsion is more than food. It is a strong medicine. It rouses up dull children, puts new flesh on thin ones and red blood into pale ones It makes children grow. Scott's Emulsion makes ordinary food do its duty.

Didn't Recognize It.

A distinguished member of the United States judiciary has discovered that he still has something to learn in the direction of agriculture.

He bought a farm as a summer home for his family and finds especial delight in walking about the place, commenting on the condition of the crops and in many ways showing his interest in his new possessions.

One evening during the summer he was strolling over the farm. The hired man had cut the grass during the day, a very thin crop, and had left it lying on the ground to dry. The judge saw it, and, calling his man, he said:

"It seems to me you are very careless. Why haven't you been more particular in raking up this hay? Don't you see that you have left little dribblings all around?"

For a minute the hired man stared, wondering if the judge was quizzing him. Then he replied:

"Little dribblings! Why, man, that's the crop!"

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 30.—The state board of health has been advised of a case which is likely to cause considerable trouble. A young man whose home is in Bloomingdale township, Van Buren county, but who teaches school in Fair Grove township, taught school for nearly two weeks after an eruption appeared on his face and body. The trouble was called Cuban itch, but now proves to be genuine smallpox. He not only exposed all the scholars and others with whom he came in contact in Fair Grove township, but those whom he met in Bloomingdale, where he spent Sunday. THE HABIT OF GIVING.

Governor E. D. Morgan's First Taste of Real Happiness.

To the present generation the name of Governor E. D. Morgan of New York is scarcely more than a dim echo from the pages of history, but there are men still living who remember him as one of the group of great war governors whose firmness and courage served their country so magnificently in her darkest hour. It was one who so remembered him who told this incident:

Governor Morgan was a very rich man, but until he was seventy years old he never had given away any of his wealth. Then one day he sent for his old friend, Dr. Adams, the president of Union Theological seminary, and told him that he wished to give a large sum of money to the college. The doctor, almost incredulous at first, was soon convinced of the sincerity of the offer, and a time was set at which he was to go and get the bonds.

At the appointed hour the doctor appeared, and bonds to the value of more than $200,000 were put into his hands. The governor stood and watched until the doctor's carriage was out of sight. Afterward he spoke of it to another friend.

"I am an old man," he said. "I have had a successful life and done about all that I had planned to do, and I supposed that I had been happy. But I know now that until I stood and watched Dr. Adams drive away with those bonds I never had known what happiness was. I cannot regret too deeply that early in life I did not form the habit of giving."—Youth's Companion.

The Wills of Noah and Jacob.

The origin of testaments is lost in obscurity, but doubtless they followed soon after the first institution of private property. Eusebius says that Noah made a will soon after the flood wherein he disposed of the whole world. He was certainly possessed of a considerable landed estate, but Eusebius' story of the testament in writing and witnessed under his seal needs confirmation.

In the forty-eighth chapter of Genesis, however, we do find mention of a will, wherein Jacob bequeathed to his son Joseph twice as much as to his other children. This was not a testament in writing, but a verbal or nuncupative testament, declared by the testator "in extremis" before witnesses and depending upon oral testimony.

Such nuncupative testaments were at one time recognized in English law, but in the eighteenth century, Blackstone says, they had fallen into disuse and were hardly ever heard of.

Weighing Machines.

Weighing machines and scales of some kind were in use 1800 B. C., for it is said that Abraham at that time "weighed out" 400 shekels of silver, current money, with the merchant to Ephron, the Hittite, as payment for a piece of land, including the cave and all the standing timber "in the field and in the fence." This is said to be the earliest transfer of land of which any record survives and that the payment was made in the presence of witnesses.

The original form of the weighing scale was probably a bar suspended from the middle, with a board or shell suspended from each end, one to contain the weight, the other to contain the matter to be weighed. The steelyard was probably so called from the material of which it was made and from its former length. It is also known as the Roman balance and is of great antiquity.

Ears.

If your ears burn, people say, some one is talking about you. This is very old, for Pliny says, "When our ears do glow and tingle, some do talk of us in our absence."

Shakespeare, in "Much Ado About Nothing," makes Beatrice say to Ursula and Hero, who had been talking of her, "What fire is in mine ears!"

Sir Thomas Browne ascribes this conceit to the superstition of guardian angels, who touch the right ear if the talk is favorable and the left if otherwise. This is done to cheer or warn.

One ear tingles, some there be
That are snarling now at me.

Before Mirrors.

Mrs. Snaggs—I read a paragraph in the paper which said, "Woman was made before mirrors, but it wasn't her fault." Don't you think that is a mean remark to make about woman?

Mr. Snaggs—Yes, I think it is. What the writer meant to say was that woman was made before mirrors and had been before them ever since.—Exchange.

Mr. C. C. Church, of 520 South 7th street, Ann Arbor, now retired from the active duties of life, says:

"I have no hesitation in recommending Doan's Ointment. To anyone requiring a healing and soothing preparation it will prove invaluable. I suffered for years from itching hemorhoids and though I tried everything I could hear of and used remedies prescribed by scores of friends I was unable to obtain permanent relief until my attention was called to Doan's Ointment. I was somewhat surprised after the second application to notice what a different effect it had from anything I had hitherto used. Encouraged I used it strictly according to directions and in a surprisingly short length of time when you take into account the number of years I was afflicted, the irritation ceased and the inflammation was allayed. When Doan's Ointment cured me it will cure others."

ORIGINAL JUDGE LYNCH.

He Was a Brave and Useful Member of Our Early Society.

Tradition sometimes plays strange pranks with dead men's reputations. It would make an interesting half hour for the eavesdropper beyond the Styx if he could hear the exchange of amenities between Duns Scotus and Judge Lynch, the one a shrewd, clear reasoner, whose name now signifies a fool; the other a simple Quaker gentleman, whose name has come to stand for organized savagery.

Charles Lynch was a man whose services to his country as a brave pioneer and righteous judge, as a soldier and a statesman, are by no means deserving of oblivion, still less of obloquy. It seems indeed one of the iniquities of fate that his name should now be universally applied to proceedings that no one would condemn more heartily than he. The records of the court of Bedford county, in Virginia, and those of various Quaker meetings, the journals of the Virginia house of burgesses and of the first constitutional convention, taken together with family documents and traditions, show him to have been an upright and useful member of society and a wise and energetic leader at the most important crisis of American history.—Atlantic.

Chinese Typesetting.

When a Chinese compositor sets type, he places them in a wooden frame 22 by 15 inches. This frame has twenty-nine grooves, each for a line of type, and the type rests in clay to the depth of a quarter of an inch. The types are of wood, perfectly square, and the compositor handles them with pinchers.

Doubled as Alimony.

"Oh, yes, daughter's fully twice as happy as she was with her husband."

"How so?"

"Why, he used to give her an allowance of only $10, and now he has to pay her $20."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. ITALIAN VIOLINS.

The First "Strad" Sent to London Could Find No Purchaser.

Italian violins have not always held the supremacy they now enjoy. It was not indeed till the beginning of the nineteenth century that they came into vogue to any extent outside their native land. Previously Jacob Steiner (1621-83) was the favorite maker, and his high model had been almost exclusively copied by his fellow Germans and the different makers in France and England. When the elder Corvetto, who had been a merchant before entering the musical profession, came to London, in 1738, he brought with him some instruments by Stradivari. The result of this endeavor to introduce Italian work into England fills one with pathetic wonder. It is almost beyond belief. As he could not get as much as £5 ($25) for a violoncello he was obliged to send the instrument back to Italy for a bad speculation. Five pounds for a "Strad," and not a single purchaser to be found!

This incident in itself furnishes sufficient testimony to the slavish following of the great German maker and the strong prejudice of the violinists of that period in favor of the high model It is indeed the players who are most to blame for the slow adoption of the flat model, for the creator must make what is necessitated by the demand; but the eighteenth century fiddlers, at any rate in England, France and Germany, seem for the most part to have been content that their violins should possess a small sweet tone, never realizing the lack of power and sonority.—Connoisseur.

He Said to Himself.

Kansas enjoys the distinction, possibly, of being the only state in the Union where a man has been allowed by a court of inquiry to testify regarding what he said to himself.

A committee had been appointed by the legislature, says The Green Bag, to investigate the alleged bribery of certain members in connection with a defeated railroad bill. The first witness called testified that he saw one of the representatives late one night coming down the hotel stairs.

"I said to myself," he went on, but a member on the side of the defense jumped to his feet.

"Hold on!" he shouted. "You can't testify about what you said to yourself!"

The prosecutor retorted that there was no law to prohibit him from so testifying. A long argument ensued, but a majority of the committee agreed with the chairman that the testimony was admissible.

"I said to myself," seriously proceeded the witness, "that M. had been up to Billy's room to get his pay."

Chinese Points For Hosts.

"Don't eat with your ears," says Yuan Mei, a Chinese writer, "by which I mean do not aim at having extraordinary out of the way foods, just to astonish your guests, for that is to eat with your ears, not with your mouth. Bean curd, if good, is actually nicer than birds' nest. And better than sea slugs, which are not first rate, is a dish of bamboo shoots.

"The chicken, the pig, the fish and the duck—these are the four heroes of the table. Sea slugs and birds' nest have no characteristic flavors of their own. They are but usurpers in the house. I once dined with a friend who gave us birds' nests in bowls like vats, holding each about four ounces of the plain boiled article. The other guests applauded vigorously, but I smiled and said I came here to eat birds' nest, not to take delivery of it wholesale."

He Understood.

Anton Rubinstein, the Russian composer, in his autobiography tells of the confusion which overcame a certain architect of his acquaintance who had a habit of interlarding all his remarks with the phrase, "You understand."

On one occasion he was explaining certain architectural matters to the emperor, and, according to custom, made free use of his favorite expression.

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Emperor Nicholas at last irritably. "Of course I understand! My dear fellow, how could I help it?"

How the Natives Treat Gorillas.

Natives in the countries inhabited by great apes regard them always as human beings of inferior types, and it is for this reason that for a long time it was found impossible to get hold of an entire gorilla skin, because the savages considered it religiously necessary to cut off the hands and feet of the animals when they killed them, just as they do with their enemies, possibly for the purpose of rendering them harmless in case they should by any chance come to life again.

His Choice of Sacrifices.

"It is true," said the person of high ideals, "that you have attained prosperity by your writings, but you have produced nothing that will live."

"Well," answered the comfortable litterateur, "when it comes to a question of which shall live, myself or my writings, I didn't hesitate to sacrifice my writings."

Volunteers In South America.

There is a gentleman in Boston who spent a number of years among the various little South American republics and who gives an interesting account of the methods of one of these small states when it comes to a question of making war. The "navy" of the particular power referred to consists of a single old fashioned side wheel steamer, armed with one gun. In time of peace she is engaged in hauling freight up and down the river which runs close to the capital.

At the outbreak of one of the periodical wars not so very long ago the president of the republic took charge of the steamer and started up stream on a recruiting expedition, leaving his senior general in charge of t

MISAPPLIED WORDS.

Some Expressions the Use of Which Should Be Reformed.

"Extra" is an abused word. People say "extra good" or "extra cheap" in order to intensify "good" and "cheap." But "extra" has no such force. So far from intensifying a given condition, it denies it by indicating that the thing so described lies outside the sphere or quality named. Thus, "extra judicial" does not mean more than ordinarily judicial, as though a judge had dredged his conscience in giving an opinion, but outside of judicial and therefore incapable of being judged at all in the prescribed way.

A grievous fault is the use of "identify" in a phrase like this, "He is identified with the antivaccination movement." A man can only identify himself with another man or set of men. He can identify himself with the opponents of vaccination—and even here the word carries a shade of meaning of its own, distinguishing the phrase from such a one as "he joined the opponents of vaccination."

One should not speak of "high" or "low" caliber; but, remembering the meaning of "caliber," one should apply to it only such adjectives as "great" or "small."

It is wrong to speak of a "consensus of opinion." The word "consensus" itself means an agreement of thought and should stand alone.—Academy.

Crank and Epicure.

"A traveling crank and epicure had the audacity to ask the head steward shortly before my boat sailed from Liverpool for New York," said a waiter on an ocean liner, "if he would mind changing three of the courses on the bill of fare for others which he preferred. He was informed politely but firmly that there were other passengers besides himself sailing on the vessel and that if he thought he could not survive on the excellent fare provided during the voyage all he had to do was to book with another line and his passage money would be returned to him.

"Steamship companies are not in the habit of returning passage money when once paid, as is well known, but in this instance we would willingly have done so.

"Our fastidious passenger did not book with another line, however, and, what is more, he ate enough at each meal on the trip to satisfy two men with sea air appetites and presented to the waiter, who attended with extreme good nature to his likes and dislikes throughout the voyage, the magnificent sum of 15 cents."—New York Mail and Express.

His Lovely Manners.

A benevolent looking man boarded a downtown elevator already occupied by three women upward bound. With a Chesterfieldian air he respectfully doffed his hat and held it in his hand until he had reached his destination.

"What a charming man! Such lovely manners!" gushed the women in chorus.

A few minutes later the benevolent looking man of the lovely manners reached his office. Pitching his hat on the back of his beneficent head, sprawling himself down in true manly abandon at his desk, puffing a clay pipe in an artistic masculine fashion, occasionally expectorating in the vicinity of a cuspidor, he greets his six-dollar-a-week-for-ten-hours-a-day stenographer by jocularly inquiring why in thunder those legal papers aren't finished.

Lovely man!

Oh, yes; very!—San Francisco Wave.

The Wrong Crop.

Visiting an out of the way English parish when the incumbent happened to be away, a former archdeacon of Suffolk was, it is related, shown round by the clerk. On arriving at the churchyard he found a fine crop of wheat growing in it.

"Dear, dear!" said the archdeacon. "I can't approve of this. I really did not think Mr. —— would have planted wheat in the churchyard."

"That's just what I told parson," said the clerk. "I says," says I, "ye didn't ought to have wheated it; ye ought to have tatered it!"

When Wives Were Sold.

A century or so ago wife selling was not an uncommon event in England, as the following item, which appeared in the London News of Nov. 21, 1801, would show:

"On Friday a coal porter exhibited his wife in Smithfield, with a halter round her neck, for sale. He demanded a guinea for her, but she hung on hand for some time, until a man of good appearance made the purchase, and packing her, halter and all, into a hackney coach drove for Blackfriars bridge, amid the huzzas of the mob."

A woman went into a big department store and checked her baby while she shopped. When she went to get her baby, she found she had lost her check. The manager said she would have to wait and when all the other babies were taken out she could have the one that was left, but the baby left over was a colored baby. This was all right, however, as the woman was colored.—Atchison Globe.

Deep Sea Life.

In the abysses of the oceans, below 500 fathoms many animals have either imperfect eyes or none. Their condition in this regard affords a suggestive parallel to that of cave life, and the causes are probably the same. Science is of the opinion that all deep sea life originally emigrated from the shallows.

Macedonia has a population of about 1,000,000. Three-fourths are Christian and one-fourth Turks. Nearly half a of Bulgarian ancestry.

Cunning Siberian Natives.

When compelled to travel all night, the Siberian natives always make a practice of stopping just before sunrise and allowing their dogs to go to sleep. They argue that if the dog goes to sleep while it is yet dark and wakes up in an hour and finds the sun shining he will suppose that he has had a full night's rest and will travel all day without thinking of being tired. One or even two hours' stop at any other time is perfectly useless, as the dogs will be uncontrollable from that time forward until they are permitted to take what they think a full allowance of sleep.

WOMAN

IS LIKE A DELICATE MUSICAL INSTRUMENT

In good condition she is sweet and lovable, and sings life's song on a joyful harmonious string. Out of order or unstrung, there is discordance and unhappiness. Just as there is one key note to all music so there is one key note to health. A woman might as well try to fly without wings as to feel well and look well while the organs that make her a woman are weak or diseased. She must be healthy inside or she can't be healthy outside. There are thousands of women suffering silently all over the country. Mistaken modesty urges their silence. While there is nothing more admirable than a modest woman, health is of the first importance. Every other consideration should give way before it. Bradfield's Female Regulator is a medicine for women's ills. It is the safest and quickest way to cure leucorrhea, falling of the womb, nervousness, headache, backache and general weakness. You will be astonished at the result, especially if you have been experimenting with other so-called remedies. We are not asking you to try an uncertainty. Bradfield's Regulator has made happy thousands of women. What it has done for others it can do for you. Sold in drug stores for $1 a bottle.

THEY CRUSH THE POWERS

This is written in mid-October. The long, oppressive summer is quite gone. Fading leaf, withering tree and the rustling corn in the fields are signs of the season. Fog, frost, rain, snow,—they are coming. You remember last winter; of 1900 and 1901. The weather was cruel. Ah! the thousands it killed, and the hundreds of thousands it maimed and crippled. Oh, the rough grasp it laid on men at work, women at home, and children in cribs and cradles. Coughs that began before Thanksgiving Day are racking and tearing them still; yes, and growing worse as they dig deeper into the poor, tired throat and lungs. Many were cured by using Benson's Porous Plasters. For the soothing and healing power of these Plasters is wonderful. They conquer the complaints

THAT ARE KILLING THE PEOPLE.

No other plaster, no other medicine or application, can compare with them. Coughs, colds, backache, rheumatism, lumbago, kidney and liver troubles, asthma, influenza,—they all go down before Benson's Plasters like a snow image in the sun. You can't throw money away on a Benson's Plaster. Everybody is going to use them this season. But make certain you get the genuine. All druggists, or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on receipt of 25c. each.

Does it Pay to Buy Cheap?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the more severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible for you, then in either case take the ONLY remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung trouble, "Boschee's German Syrup." It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest, and cures the patient. Try one bottle. HEART IS CHANGED

Lord Rosebery is Now "Agin the Irish."

WANTS THEM OUT OF CAMP

Says He Never Would Be Ready to Grant Them Independent Parliament—Government Don't Think Enough About the Future.

Liverpool, Feb. 15.—Lord Rosebery received a tremendous ovation at the great liberal demonstration here last evening. His lengthy speech, the principal one of the evening, was attentively received and heartily applauded. He failed to throw any fresh light on the war situation but strongly emphasized his hostility to the Irish party and his desire to utterly alienate it from the liberal camp.

During his remarks Lord Rosebery said that the greatest change in heart and head undergone during his five years' absence from public life was in regard to the Irish problem. Mr. Gladstone's bills were dead and buried, though that statement cast no reflection on the great statesman who originated them. The Irish party had now indignantly repudiated any connection with the liberal party and he believed they had acted wisely. It was both to their interests and to those of the liberal party. The Irish leaders had played their full hand. They had demanded an imperial parliament in Dublin, and thereupon he had cried "Halt." This remark was greeted with applause. Continuing, Lord Rosebery said:

"I am not prepared at any time or under any circumstances to grant them an independent parliament. No sane person would ever consent to handing over the destinies of Ireland, situated in the very heart of the empire, to a parliament controlled by those who have expressed the earnest wish that we might be overthrown in battle. The Irish question is too large for any one party. It will need the energy and the patriotism of both great parties to deal therewith. These are my personal sentiments, but I wish to make them perfectly clear on returning to public life."

Regarding the war, Lord Rosebery said he had had been ignorantly ridiculed for the suggestion of "casual peace negotiations in some wayside inn," but that he thought the recent mission of Dr. Kuyper, the Dutch premier, bore a fairly close analogy to such a course. The speaker said he thought the reply of Lord Lansdowne, the under secretary for foreign affairs, to Dr. Kuyper was fitting and dignified, but he thought the government had acted wrongly in declining to reckon with the Boer delegates in Europe, and allow them to send a deputation to South Africa.

"The trouble with the government," said Lord Rosebery, "is that they are always thinking of the present. I try to think of the future, when Boer and Briton will have to live together in South Africa."

The speaker appealed for a searching inquiry into the remount scandal, and commented generally upon the government's seeming want of a definite policy in Malta and Wei Hai Wei. In conclusion, he begged that his hearers would not be too ready to allow their hands to be tied by the Anglo-Japanese alliance.

LAURIE MARKS ALIVE.

Famous Bookmaker Is Said to Be In Springfield, Mass.

Springfield, Mass., Feb. 15.—A rumor is current here that Laurie Marks, the bookmaker, who was supposed to have committed suicide in the English channel Nov. 27, is alive and in hiding about the city. The report originated with a member of the police department.

During the past few days numerous old friends of Marks living in this vicinity have received payment in full for loans made him about three years ago. The money has been paid through an agent, who absolutely declined to answer questions. Many persons believe that Marks is in Brazil.

He left Springfield two years ago for London, where he opened a pool room, which figured in the sensational swindle of the Bank of Liverpool. He had borrowed extensively, but he had a good reputation as a "sport," and it was known that sooner or later every debt would be paid. Three days ago a representative of Marks paid off all the obligations, which are estimated at an amount between $1,500 and $3,000. A police official who is in a position to know made the statement yesterday that Marks is here, or was here in the past few days. City Marshal Stebbins says that under the circumstances the police would have no right to molest Marks if he should be seen on the street.

Home for the Aged.

New York, Feb. 15.—By the terms of the will of Carolius S. Rathcone of this city, filed for probate in the surrogate's office yesterday, property and money to the extent of $70,000 is bequeathed for the purpose of founding and maintaining an institution to be known as the Rathcone memorial home for aged and infirm persons. The home is to be located at Evansville, Ind., where the testatrix owns considerable property.

Hoar Has an Amendment.

Washington, Feb. 15.—Senator Hoar has offered the following amendment to the Philippine tariff bill now pending in the senate, the provision to be inserted at the end of the bill, "no person in the Philippines islands shall, under the authority of the United States, be convicted of treason by any tribunal, civil or military, unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court."

BEHIND THE BARS

Frank C. Andrews, Rearrested for Missappropriating Funds.

HE COULD NOT GET BAIL

The Famous Bank Wrecker Takes His Medicine Without a Murmur—Further Information Comes to Light Regarding His Doings.

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 17.—For a second time since his downfall, Frank C. Andrews, vice-president of the City Savings bank and ex-police commissioner, finds himself under arrest, and this time behind the bars of the jail.

About noon on Saturday a warrant charging Andrews with misappropriating funds belonging to the City Savings bank, to the extent of $200,000, was placed in the hands of Detective Lombard. The warrant was immediately served. Then began a search by Andrews's friends to secure bondsmen, bail having been fixed at $15,000. The search lasted all the afternoon, but without avail. No one was willing to vouch for the appearance in court of this once great leader of the financial circles of Detroit.

At 6:30 o'clock he was arraigned before Justice Whelan, Assistant Prosecuting Attorney Louis C. Wurzer representing the people, and Attorney Fred A. Baker the defendant. The latter stated they had been unable to secure bondsmen, and after reading the complaint demanded a thorough examination of the facts in that court.

Sheriff Dickson then announced to Andrews that he would be compelled to put him in a prison cell. Andrews was ready, evidently, for he made no murmur. That he expected to be bailed out before midnight was evident, and he thought his confinement would not be for long.

When the sheriff started to search him, Andrews assisted in the operation, but nothing was found. There was no money on his person, nor anything of any value. After being registered, and other formalities gone through, he was assigned to a cell in the east end of the building.

At 12 o'clock all efforts to secure bondsmen had failed, and Andrews was obliged to remain in custody all Sunday.

That the drop in Amalgamated copper stock was the cause of Frank C. Andrews's downfall is given additional testimony in the warrant on which he was sent to the county jail Saturday. It had been supposed that nearly all of Andrews's alleged shady work in wrecking the City Savings bank was done within a week or ten days before the doors of the institution were closed, but the investigations of the prosecuting attorney show that Andrews had begun to sink before last Christmas, and the particular transaction upon which the warrant was based took place Dec. 18, 1901.

It was on that day that Andrews is accused of having deposited in the City Savings bank two checks aggregating $200,000, and upon which he took out of the bank an equal amount in cash.

It is an interesting coincidence that on Dec. 17 the quotations of Amalgamated reached the lowest point up to that time. About two weeks previous to this time the stock had still been above 80, but it quickly dropped from then, until, on Dec. 17, it closed at 61¾ asked. It seems more than likely that at that time Andrews was called upon by the banks that held his Amalgamated copper stock for money to make it good as collateral for the money loaned upon it, it being probable that it had been accepted as collateral at a higher figure.

A further interesting fact may be seen in the newspaper files of Dec. 18. It was on that day that the last report of the City Savings bank was published. That report, however, was based upon the condition of the bank as it was found Dec. 10.

A telegram from Lansing last night stated that Deputy Attorney-General Chase says further charges will be made against Frank C. Andrews during the coming week.

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 17.—When she learned that her convict husband was dead, Mrs. Sarah Quimby, who is serving a life sentence at the Detroit house of correction for poisoning her two children, burst into tears. Died Without Confessing.

Jackson, Mich., Feb. 15.—Elmer Quimby, sent from Ithaca, Gratiot county, for poisoning his children, died in the prison hospital yesterday afternoon of typhoid fever, aged 38 years. His wife is in the house of correction at Detroit for life for the same crime. Quimby died without confessing, reiterating the statement that their mother killed the children.

Smallpox in Lumber Camps.

Boyne, Mich., Feb. 15.—An epidemic of smallpox has broken out in White & Wigle's logging camp, 12 miles east of here. The patients are isolated and all camps are in process of fumigation. The school teachers of the high school here have been vaccinated and public gatherings called off.

A PACIFIC CABLE

Commerce Committe Will Recommend Corliss Bill.

CORLISS GIVES OUT POINTERS

Wants United States to Build It—Says It Is Our Duty to Do So for the Prosperity of Our Pacific Possessions.

Washington, Feb. 17.—The report to be filed today by the house committee on interstate and foreign commerce recommending the passage of the bill introduced by Rep. Corliss, providing for government ownership of a Pacific cable, says that the United States, by the annexation of Hawaii and the acquisition of the Philippines and other islands, through the ratification of the Paris treaty, assumed the responsibility of maintaining peace in the Pacific ocean. This obligation, the report, which was prepared by Rep. Corliss, the author of the bills, says was deliberately undertaken by this country and approved by the united voice of the people. It adds:

"The future peace and prosperity of these islands will largely depend upon the facilities extended by our government for the advancement and enlightenment of the people there. If we are to continue in control of these islands, the people must be made to understand the character and purpose of our government and to feel the benefits of enlightened civilization and American liberty. This can be accomplished through the medium of cable communication."

Regarding government ownership of cables, Mr. Corliss says England for 50 years had been constantly acquiring by purchase and construction, cable communication with her vast possessions, until she has expended upwards of a hundred million dollars for this purpose, and operates her own cables connecting her colonies. England is now constructing a Pacific cable from Vancouver to Australia.

"France, Germany and other nations are not sleeping upon their rights, as the people of the United States have been," comments Mr. Corliss, "but are establishing government telegraphic communication with their respective possessions.

"I therefore contend that the Pacific cable should be owned, controlled and operated by the government of the United States. It should be made by an American manufacturer, laid by an American ship under the American flag, and operated at actual cost for the dissemination of knowledge, the proper direction of our army and navy and the advancement of our trade and commerce in the Pacific. The transmission of communication should be held by the state.

General Greely, chief of the signal service of the war department, who has charge of the telegraphic lines owned by the government and who has given the subject careful consideration and constructed several hundred miles of cable under the control of the war department, the report says, estimates the entire cost of a Pacific cable, including ships and all possible contingencies, at $10,000,000, and places the annual expenses at $525,000.

The vote, authorizing a favorable report of the bill, stood eight for and seven against. Two members, Mann and Davis, favorable to the bill, were absent.

Caught in a Snowslide.

Lewiston, Idaho, Feb. 17.—A miner just arrived from Warrens, brings news of the death of three men, who were caught Saturday in a snowslide near the head of Smith Gulch, on the route to Thunder mountain. The victims were Bert Tules, J. S. Campbell and D. M. Skyles of Weiser, Idaho. Arid Williams of Wetson, and A. Myers of Boise, were the other members of the party, but they escaped death. From Buffalo Hump comes the news that Ben Hamilton lost his life in a snowslide last Wednesday. Hamilton was caught in an avalanche of snow about a mile wide. His body has not been recovered.

Tribute to the Maine Dead.

Washington, Feb. 17.—Secretary Long has received by express from Chicago a box containing a beautiful wreath of red roses and lilies of the valley on which was placed a small card with the following unsigned message: "Kindly take this to Arlington cemetery and place it on the mound of the Maine dead." Secretary Long directed that the flowers be turned over to the quartermaster's department of the army so that the wishes of the unknown sender might be complied with.

Warned Negro Employers.

Vincennes, Ind., Feb. 17.—At Wheatland, this county, there is a negro settlement. The negroes work for white farmers. All are quiet and unoffensive, but there is a prejudice against them. The following notices, signed "Fire Bugs," were today found and have produced a sensation: "Notice is hereby given that any man who employs negro labor after the first day of March, or harbors, leases or rents lands to any negro, their houses will be burned after the first day of April."

Fear an Eruption.

Chilpancingo, Mex., Feb. 17.—Great alarm still prevails here over the discovery of seven small openings in the mountain between this city and Chilapa, from which smoke is pouring, it being feared that the city is in danger of a greater peril than that recently experienced. The terror of the inhabitants was added to Sunday by an earthquake that occurred between 1 and 2 o'clock in the morning, which was severe enough to awake the entire city from slumber.

Held a Secret Session.

Saginaw, Mich., Feb. 15.—A largely attended meeting of the Michigan Beet Sugar association was held at the Bancroft yesterday afternoon. The meeting was held behind closed doors. The topics in discussion were contracts, prices and the Cuban tariff matter. An invitation to have the association represented at the meeting at the Merchants and Manufacturers' association in Detroit next Monday night was accepted, and it is expected that every factory in the state will be represented.

Tolstoi is Recovering.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 17.—Count Tolstoi's temperature is at 100, while his pulse is 84. He is very weak, but is bearing up well. It is still hoped that he may recover.

U. OF M. STUDENT SUICIDES.

Albert O. Kline of Chicago Took Prussic Acid.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Feb. 17.—Albert O. Klein committed suicide here early Sunday morning by taking prussic acid. The cause for his rash act is unknown. He left a note, saying his life was a failure, but gave no reason why. Lately he has been slightly troubled with insomnia. Since Christmas he has had a few light attacks of malaria, but beyond that has been apparently very well. He was a chemist and secured the elements of prussic acid. He arose early Sunday morning, took a bath, found a tumbler and made the poison. His death must have been almost instantaneous.

He was a good student and stood well in all his classes. This semester he received one light condition but never gave it a thought. His death was a shock to all his friends. Up to the last he was jolly and apparently happy, not unusually so, but just the same as ever. No threat of suicide was ever mentioned, and nobody can explain his act. He was bright, industrious and well liked by everyone who knew him. His home is in Chicago. An inquest will be held. This is the second suicide within the last two weeks.

MAYBURY WANTS IT.

Detroit's Mayor Figuring to Purchase Federal Telephone Plant.

Cleveland, O., Feb. 17.—The $1,000,000 cash bond issue, a part of the $6,500,000 issue incident to the collateral trust plan for financing the properties of the Federal Telephone Co., will furnish the ready money to make the company of one of the most powerful independent telephone concerns in the country. While money will be used all over the state, a good share of it will be used in Cleveland and Columbus. Three thousand additional telephones will, it is said, be placed in the local plant of the Federal Telephone Co., and one thousand will be added to the Columbus exchange.

It can now be said as an assured fact that the uncompleted plant at Detroit will be sold. Whether the move to purchase, headed by Mayor Maybury of Detroit, will succeed or not is just now an open question.

At the same time, it is said, that Mayor Maybury is basing his offer on the municipal ownership idea. On the other hand, other parties are figuring on the purchase of the plant.

The Owosso Carriage Co. filed notice of increase of capital stock from $50,000 to $100,000.

Gave Up the Fight.

Bay City, Mich., Feb. 17.—The Bay County Sugar Beet Growers' association have thrown up its fight for an increase of pay from factories for their beets next year and decided to make contracts at the same rate paid last year. It was reported that the factories had 50 per cent of their acreage secured for the next campaign, and it was too late now to undertake to get more money. The association went upon record in favor of the state appointing inspectors for each factory to look after the interests of the farmers. The association also propose to put paid agents into the field next summer to organize all farmers so they will present a solid front when making the demand next season for more pay.

Leaped to His Death.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 17.—E. H. Lewis, a fireman on the Pere Marquette train going north, died Saturday night as the result of injuries received by jumping off his engine. The train was approaching Traverse City when both fireman and engineer thought they saw another train coming. The engineer reversed his engine and put on air and then got down on the step ready to jump and the fireman did the same on the other side. The engineer discovered his mistake and stayed on, but Lewis leaped and was so badly injured that he died soon after reaching here. He was 29 years old and leaves a young widow.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON SESSION

At 1:30 o'clock Pres. Woodward called the meeting to order and announced that Mr. Laing would talk on "Forestry" in place of Chas. W. Garfield, of Grand Rapids. Upon this subject Mr. Laing said: "Measures must soon be taken to stop the destruction of timber, or before many years it will become a scarcity. A very good plan is adopted in South Dakota, there every man is privileged to settle so many acres of land providing he plant a certain number of trees per year.

Forests have proven a Godsend to the farmer in many ways. They not only make the rainfalls more frequent, but also collect the moisture and impart it to the surrounding ground. This fact is noticed more in the northern part of Michigan, where there are large forests the snow has been known to cover the ground the whole year through, and after these forest have become cleared, the snow lasts but a short time and the snow falls are less frequent.

Pres. Woodward continued the discussion and asked permission of Mr. Laing to put one question, "Why did our pilgrim ancesters pray for rain that they might have abundant harvests, when this country was nothing but a howling wilderners? Unanswered.

After a piano solo by Miss Edith Rector, the president introduced W. D. VanTuyle, of Clinton, who delivered an interesting paper entitled "The Farmer as a Financier" upon which he says: "The farmer of today must be more than a common laborer, he must be a successful business man and in order to become successful, he must have a credit, a small business with a large credit is better than a large business and a small credit, he should base his credit upon some wise investment, something that will at any time pay the principal. Luxeries depreciate in value as they grow old, while if his credit is placed in live stock 'tis a sure investment.

Mr VanTuyle's paper showed careful forethought and judgement this together with a good delivery made a fine impression on his audience.

Instrumental music was rendered by the Misses Rlanche and Bertha Macham, of Holloway, after which Ralph Bowen gave a recitation which gained much applause.

"Raising and Care of Poultry" was the last discussion of the afternoon. Mr. John Richard upon this subject says, I am not a very old man in the poultry business, but what experience I have gained I will give for the benefit of others. I have in all 255 hens, mostly those of mixed breds, as this suits my purpose better. I prize the large white egg above all others. There are various ways in which to make your hens lay. One of my neighbors said, 'I stuff her, by George, till she has to lay' This is exactly my plan. Their feed consist of the following rations: In the morning I feed them one peck of boiled potatoes, six quarts of middling's skimmed milk, Armours' meat meal and salt the whole until agreeable to taste, also if the morning is cold I add a little cayenne pepper; noons their rations consist of about 12 quarts of oats with a change of eight quarts of wheat every other day. Again about four o'clock I feed them all the corn they can stuff, if I find the chickens are becoming lazy, I shut off on the corn.

Many people are troubled by their chickens having lice, the following recipe has proven very good for lice on chickens: 14 oz carbolic acid, 2 oz. oil of tar, 7 pints kerosine. With this mixture I paint the roosts just before the hens seek their coop.

Mr. Waldron's recipe for lice was sifted coal ashes, the particles of ashes penetrate every crevice in the hen house and when they once strike the louse, he is a goner.

Miss Clara Waldron next read a paper, which proved of great interest to those present. Mr. Russ, a friend of Dr. Waldron's gave a brief talk along the line of poultry, after which the institute was brought to a close by the Macham sisters, of Holloway, rendering a musical selection

In every way the institute proved a success, every farmer found his time well spent while attending and no doubt the following year will see many improvements in the way of farming. "It all depends" as Mr. Moore says "Upon the amount of individual effort applied."

Some men will fly up stairs two steps at a jump to save time, and then stop a couple of minutes at the top to take breath.

DECEPTIONS

When before the altar the priest asked her, "Are you content?" it was with all her soul Gemma had responded, "Yes!"

Oh, yes; she was content indeed. Through the cloud of costly lace which enwrapped her in its snowy transparence she saw the vast church all dotted with lights resplendent in the dark gleam of mosaics upon golden backgrounds, animated by the slight movement of the very elegant crowd that filled it, lighted by oblique rays descending from the nave, all a glitter of gold, silks and brilliants, and it was her own future that she seemed to see thus—the years of luxury and wealth which her rich marriage was preparing for her. And had it not been the dream for which she sighed? She, the ideal blond, of eighteen years, with the tall and proud figure, the pure, disdainful profile under heavy curls like those of an archangel, with haughty eyes sparkling like blue gems under the golden fringes of her long eyelashes.

She had been for a long time a poor girl, the daughter of citizens who had seen better days, that marvelous human lily. She had experienced all the petty troubles, all the cruel daily sufferings of misery that conceals itself The poor and inelegant gowns, painfully remodeled every year; the insolence of creditors, humiliations, continual tormenting thoughts of money—she had experienced them all, and in her little heart, eager for pleasure and enjoyment, swollen with unsatisfied longings, a dream was arisen little by little, occupying all the room, rendering her insensible to all the rest—the dream of at last becoming rich.

She wanted it absolutely; she was born for it; she was rich now. That "yes" which she had just pronounced had by its three magic letters changed her destiny, and she was so content, so happy, that it appeared to her it was all a dream; that her Mechlin veil was a cloud that transported her into the realms of the impossible, across a sidereal heaven, of which the diamond pins thrust among her laces formed the flaming stars, and in order to return to reality she must cast her eyes toward her husband, Luigo Marchis, kneeling beside her in the mystic, velvety shade of the altar lit by the tremulous brightness of the candles.

Ah, there was nothing ideal about him, poor fellow! In vain he straightened his correct person of an elegant man, with his accurately shaved face, with slender brown mustache, and a still fresh color that gave him something the look of an actor. He remained none the less old, with his powerful shoulders a little bent, with his eyelids grown heavy and crow's feet toward his temples, with the gray locks that appeared here and there among his brown hair, with his forty-seven years, of which the weariness was more conspicuous beside that radiant and blond spring.

Forty-seven years! How was it possible? He felt his heart so palpitating, full of tears as in youth, and he could not comprehend how so much time had passed. He could not persuade himself of the incredible fact—forty-seven years passed without knowing Gemma.

For they had been acquainted with each other only two months! Marchis, however much he had frequented society, drawn there by his banking connections, had never let himself be talked to of marriage. What! A wife, children, troubles, cares, disappointment! Not even by idea!

And at forty-seven years one evening, present from motives of curiosity at a ball to which the employees of his bank had invited him, he must needs be smitten by the exquisite, vaporous grace of that blond girl, dressed simply in white, entering on the arm of a funny little man with a baby face and a big, silvery beard—her father, a modest clerk in the bank; a rather ridiculous little old man who, beside that divine apparition, slender in her robes of snow, made one think of the gnomes of folk tales, always crouching at the feet of fairies.

Ah, weakness of hearts growing old! That apparition was enough to shake all the ideas of Luigo Marchis concerning matrimony, and as the old gnome, despite his absolute nullity, was an honest citizen, incapable of resisting the assiduities of the director to his pretty daughter, the suitor had been greatly pleased with the consent of that little maiden of eighteen, that beautiful creature, that blond being, to become his wife. Now he trembled with joy. His eyes were misty with vivid emotion—not perceiving that that, too, was a sign of old age—and it was a voice choked with joy that to the question of the priest, "Are you content?" replied, "Oh, yes!"

Now it is done. United—forever united. Having risen to their feet, she with an elegant and light impulse, like a lily wind-lifted on its stem, he with a little effort and difficulty, wearied by emotion, they go down from the altar arm in arm. Now they pass through the church amid the murmurs of compliments which arise amid the shadows of the aisles, among the dull scraping of feet and the rustle of gowns. There on the peristyle, among the white columns, is a living wave of sun and air which comes to meet them, like a recall to real life outside of the mystic dream of the church, the creaking of the line of carriages that advanced, the slow descent of the steps, with the white train of the bride spreading and dragging upon the stairs in folds like snow, soft and light. Then the carriages depart. They are alone for the first time in the narrow space of the carriage, which the bridal dress fills with its whiteness, and the bouquet of orange blossoms, with its acute perfume of intoxicating virginity. And it is then that, conquered by the charm of that face, so delicate and proud amid its large, pallid curls, by the splendor of those blue eyes, the elderly bridegroom bends over her to kiss her.

"Dear me, dear me!"

And to see the tranquillity with which those finely cut, rose colored lips return the kisses through the veil, the question arises whether it is the bridegroom that she kisses or the Mechlin lace, at 500 the meter.

* * * * * * *

Ah, there are adorers around that beautiful Signora Marchis, so lovely and so young, married to an old man! It was expected that this fortress would be an easy one to conquer. Precisely on her wedding day Vico Molise, the most elegant and skeptical of the journalists of upper Italy, had propounded to his friends this theorism:

"Given a beautiful girl, very poor, given that she marries a rich old man; divide the number of his years by that of the hundreds of thousands of lire of which she becomes mistress, and you will have the number of months necessary for her to take a lover."

And as soon as he could he began, with many others, to attempt the demonstration of that theorem.

Well, this time the impeccable psychological diagnosis of Vico Molise had been found to fail. Not only, after some months, the beautiful Signora Marchis had no lover, but it appeared also that she never was to have one.

Always dressed with an adorable elegance, with a luxury full of good taste, the beautiful Gemma loved to amuse herself, moving freely in that society new for her, finding herself in her right place as a marvelous plant in a vase of valuable porcelain, developing itself in all its splendor. She went to dances, to the theater, enjoying the plebiscite of admiration provided by her beauty, coquetting a little with her adorers, fluttering about the fire in order to make them sparkle, her wings of a golden butterfly, but never letting herself be burned.

In the very moment of a declaration, in the midst of one of those waltzes whose notes seem made on purpose to stifle expiring virtue in their serpentine spirals, she cut short her adorer by turning her angelic head and saying serenely:

"I don't see my husband. Look a little where my husband is if you will be so kind."

And it was known that her greatest delight was to relate precisely to her husband the declarations which she had received. When she came home with him from a ball, all wrapped in the white silken folds of her sortie du bal, with her pure throat, her snowy shoulders that blossomed still more fair from her swansdown boa; when in the evening she met him in the dining room, still in visiting costume, with her slim waist tightly compressed by an exquisitely elegant gown, with her face animated by the slight excitement which elegant conversation always produces in a young woman, she amused herself immensely in addressing to her husband some of these provoking and roguish phrases:

"You know I was at Countess Foschis'. Molise was there, you know—always faithful and always in despair. And also Comelli, he that has such lugubrious gallantry—he has promised to kill himself for my sake within a month. We shall see. Ah, ah!"

And, sitting opposite to him in a rustle of satin and jet, making shine like two stars the brilliants, large as hazelnuts, which adorned her small ears, she continued to laugh, with her elastic laughter, full of mischief and full of tenderness.

Fortunate? Yes, he ought to have considered himself so. When he set himself to reason about it, to describe mentally his conjugal situation, he had to conclude that he would have done wrong to complain of his destiny. And yet—

What of the terribly unexpected had he now discovered in the depths of the pure sapphire of Gemma's eyes? Was there arisen in his soul the doubt that that faithfulness against every trial, that coldness toward her admirers, was nothing but the wish to preserve intact a position acquired with difficulty and that precisely to that position was directed all the tenderness shown toward himself? I do not know, but the vivid and impetuous joy of the wedding was no longer in him, although his love remained the same, and a painful doubt thrilled in his voice when he replied to the playful confidence of Gemma, forcing himself to laugh too:

"Take care, now, take care—the vengeance of the tyrant hangs over you"—

Ah, the poor tyrant! How he loved her! How she had known how to bind him with her little hands, white and perfumed as two lilies! For nothing in the world would he have discovered the truth, changed into certainty his fomenting doubt. So she had only to ask in order to obtain, for now for him that love of which he doubted had become his life, and he felt a painful stricture at his heart at the mere thought that a day might come when he would be obliged to refuse her something. Yet that day came. Suddenly, by one of those mysterious complications of business, his bank, which until then had gone from triumph to triumph, underwent a violent shock. Not a noisy downfall, one of those open, public ruins which produce great failures, but one of those deep, intimate, secret crises that must be borne without a word, a lament, under penalty of death; that can be overcome only by force of small privations, little hidden savings. It is then that strict economy in the family becomes necessary. The luxury of Gemma in those moments became absolutely ruinous for her husband; he ought to have warned her, sought to check her. He dared not and continued to content her, but very soon came the time when he could do so no more.

It was on the occasion of a great ball to which she was to go. She had ordered from Paris a marvelous gown that became her to perfection. Still she was not satisfied. Some days before, in the showcase of the most fashionable jeweler of the city, a diadem had set in revolution all the feminine imaginations; a superb jewel of antique style, set in silver gilt, of a starry pallor, where the brilliants seemed drops of flame. Gemma wished to have it, and indeed it would be difficult to find a face adapted to the almost religious richness of that jewel more than her snowy profile of an angel in ecstasy.

Ten thousand francs was the price of that jewel, and Marchis did not have them. Mute, immovable, his heart oppressed, he listened to Gemma's words as she described it to him. How could he tell her, how could he ever tell her, that he had not the 10,000 francs! It was terrible. To another woman who should have had that caprice one might have proposed to have her own diamonds reset after that model or perhaps even to have an imitation diadem made. No one would have suspected it. But he felt that the danger lay in confessing his powerlessness. Yet it must be done. And he made an effort at courage.

Gemma had seated herself beside him, throwing back and bending a little to one side her blond head with that irresistible feminine movement which displays the white throat, the pure line descending from the slender neck to the full bloomed bust, down to the round and flexible waist.

"I would like to have it. It seems to me that I should look well. Don't you think so? I have a great wish to be beautiful. If you knew why?"

She laughed now deliciously, with the air of her roguish hours. He was silent for a moment. Then, fixing a vague look upon the delicate designs of the oriental carpet, paling as if from an inward wound, he murmured:

"The fact is that I do not know—I do not really know whether—whether I shall be able to buy it for you"—

"Why?"

She had quickly raised her head much surprised, uneasy, looking at him. Such a thing had never happened to her.

Marchis wiped his forehead and resumed his discourse.

"The fact is—you see, in a bank like ours there are moments that—certain moments in which one cannot—in which it is impossible."

What was impossible for him in that moment was to finish the phrase. He stopped and lifted his eyes timidly to her, desolately, as if to beg her to help him. She was very pale, with a sudden hardness in all her features, in her compressed mouth, in her knit brows, in her sparkling eyes.

"Have you not ten thousand francs? Is it possible?"

And her voice was as hard as her look, a profound hardness that startled him. But all at once her face changed expression, she recovered her fresh, tuneful laugh, and the sweet and limpid ray was rekindled in her blue eyes.

"Come, you want to tell me stories, so as not to buy me anything. Deceiver! I that wished to be beautiful in order to drive Vico Molise a little crazy. He has declared to me that he is tired of my perfidy. See, you deserve—do you know that I am becoming angry with you?"

She really believed that she had hit the truth with her words. Indeed he had so well kept up the illusion with her, he had hidden so jealously his embarrassment, that she did not know how to explain this sudden restriction. But meanwhile every word of hers was a blow to the heart of Marchis. He saw her already at the ball, passing from arm to arm, with her step like a flying angel; listening to the insidious compliments of Vico Molise and his kind and keeping meantime in her heart that leaven of rancor against him because of his refusal. And he saw himself again, as he had seen himself a little while before in the mirror, old, weary, worn, beside her, so fresh, young, with eyes sparkling from the cruel scorn of one who has made an unequal bargain.

Suddenly he rose like one who has taken a decision, passed his hand across his brow and, without replying, went away to go out of the house. She believed that she had conquered and let him go without moving herself, only with a flash of cunning in her eyes. But when he was on the stairs the door opened, and a blond head appeared between the folding doors:

"We are agreed, then?"

He did not reply, and she heard his step down the stairway, slow, heavy, weary.

* * * * * * *

"Come in." And he entered.

In the little dressing room so illuminated as to seem on fire, with the air filled with fragrance from the little unstoppered bottle of perfume, all gleaming white with the disorder of feminine apparel scattered about, Gemma stood erect before the mirror between two kneeling maids, ready dressed for the ball. She was truly radiant in her gown of white satin with almond blossoms, with fresh sprays of almond flowers around the neck of the dress, at the waist, among the waving folds of the train. Issuing from that covering of delicate, pale, dawn tinted flowers, she, too, was fresh as they, with her faintly rosy complexion, as if she were one of those flowers become a person. But under her lashes gleamed anon the flash of cold and cruel rancor.

Her husband had not given her the diadem.

But, hearing him enter, she turned, and, seeing that he held a casket in his hands, she comprehended everything. With a bound she was beside him, her arms twined around his neck.

"Oh, how good you are! How good you are! How I love you!" He trembled all over and was very pale. Gemma did not even perceive it. All at once, with one of her irresistible movements, she loosened her arms from his neck, took with one hand the casket, and with the other holding her husband's hand she led him after her to the mirror. She seated herself and opened the casket. Among puffs of red plush, under the burning light, the diadem sent forth sparks like a flame. She had a new outburst of joy, took the husband's head between her hands, drew it down and kissed his forehead—oh, the forehead of a corpse, icy and livid! Then, without looking at his features, his wandering gaze, she offered him the diadem and bent before him her blond head, which was so well suited to that mystical jewel.

"Come, sir, crown me!"

And while he sought to unite with trembling hands the clasp of the gems among those marvelous blond curls, waving and breaking into ripples of gold at every movement, she, still with her bent head, lifted her smiling eyes to meet his look. And he answered with a resigned gentleness to the smile of those perilous blue eyes, he, the poor man who deceived for the sake of desire to be deceived and who bought for himself a little mock love with—mock diamonds.—Translated For Short Stories From Italian of Haydee by E. Cavazza.

Swedish Titles.

One of the old customs is for people to indicate their business upon their visiting cards. You will receive the card of Lawyer Jones or Banker Smith or Notary Johnson or Music Professor Brown or Grosserer (which means wholesale merchant) Furgeson or Geologist Thompson, and if a man ever held an office it is customary to indicate that fact upon his card. A burgomaster is always a burgomaster, a consul is always a consul and an alderman always an alderman. The prefixes "Hon." and "Mr." are seldom used, and the title, whether commercial or professional, is observed in conversation in the same way. It would sound rather queer for any one in the United States to ask, "Wholesale Merchant MacVeagh, will you kindly pass the butter?" or "Banker Hutchinson, will you escort Frau Board of Trade Operator Jones to the table?" or "Director of Music Ziegfeld, I wish you good day?" but that is the custom in Sweden, and it is observed by children as well as grown people. A lisping child will approach a guest, make a pretty little bob courtesy and say, "Good morning, Chief Justice of Supreme Court Smith," or "Good night, Representative In Congress Brown."

It is customary also for ladies to print their maiden names upon their visiting cards in smaller type under their married names, particularly if they have a pride of family and want people to know their ancestry.—Chicago Record.

Barnum's Monkeys

"All well—all happy—lots of fun". That is the regular report from the monkey cage of Barnum's Circus ever since the keepers began dosing the monkeys with Scott's Emulsion. Consumption was carrying off two thirds of them every year and the circus had to buy new ones.

One day a keeper accidentally broke a bottle of Scott's Emulsion near the monkey cage and the monkeys eagerly lapped it up from the floor. This suggested the idea that it might do them good. Since then the monkeys have received regular doses and the keepers report very few deaths from consumption. Of course it's cheaper to buy Scott's Emulsion than new monkeys—and that suits the circus men.

Consumption in monkeys and in man is the same disease. If you have it or are threatened with it can you take the hint?

This picture represents the Trade Mark of Scott's Emulsion and is on the wrapper of every bottle.

MRS. Wm. HAIRE.

Frances Taggart was born Dec. 27, 1841, at Lake Zurich, Ill. She died in 61st year of her life, Feb 12. The immediate occasion of her death was an operation, performed in the hospital at Ann Arbor, for the relief of an internal cancer.

Mrs. Haire was the eldest of eleven children, six of whom survive her. Her father is still living in extreme old age and in feeble health. Mrs. Haire came to Michigan with her parents in 1852, at the age of nine years. She has resided in this vicinity ever since. Sept. 10, 1867, she was united in marriage to William Haire, in the village of Clinton. To them were born two children, Margaret and Robert, who, with their father, survive to mourn the loss of a tender mother. Mr. and Mrs. Haire have resided in this village for more than 25 years. During these years she has been known to a wide circle of friends as a home-loving, industrious woman, a good friend and neighbor, and a faithful Christian.

She united with the Presbyterian church some 30 years ago, and has been a loyal member of this church of her choice and love. From the hospital at Ann Arbor she sent to her pastor a text which finely gives the keynote of her life. It is from the last chapter of Proverbs in the description of the virtuous woman, 'She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness."

Her conception of life was of the noblest, that of service in the realm of the home life. To be a good wife, and a faithful mother, to be industrious in this sweetest of earthly realms was her ideal of that which was best for a woman. We all can bear witness what an exemplification of this ideal her life among us was. And yet her life was far from being selfishly self-centered. Her love for her home did not interfere with her loyalty to the church and Kingdom of Jesus Christ.

Among the last services she was permitted to render outside the home was to plan for a missionary social ten days before her death. Though never free from pain during the last days of her life, she was altogether unwilling to neglect her religious duties. It was her dearest wish to fill up her days with helpful labors for others. Of her it may well be said, "She hath done what she could."

At the last death had no terrors for her. In her last hours she kept saying over and over: "The Lord's will be done" It was her request that the hymn, "Lead Kindly Light," was sung at her funeral and also the McKinley hymn, as she called it, "Nearer my God to Thee." This is the comfort of her dear ones in the hour of their bereavement, she has "entered into rest, to be forever with the Lord."

Those present from out of town were: Fred B. Taggart, of Waukegan, Ill., Mr. and Mrs. John Herring, of Jackson, Mich., Mrs. E. G. Savage, Mrs. Will Thieme, Dr. Fuller, E. P. Fisk and H. S. Fisk.

SOCIETY

A Delightful open day of the Monday Club at the Home of

MRS. JAMES McCANN

Vesterday, and the Usual Number of Card Parties.

The Monday Club gave a very unique little entertainment at the home of Mrs. James McCann yesterday afternoon from two o'clock until five. It was a departure from established club customs, there being no literary program, nor even any apology for the absence of one.

The gathering was confined entirely to Monday club members and ex-members, no outside invitations being issued and was a sort of reunion of old Monday club forces.

It was just a social day, an echo of St. Valentine, a trifle late according to the calendar, but none the less enjoyable on account of this slight difference in dates. Unfortunately the saints do not always have their celebrations on Monday and the club insist punctilliously on that day hence the unavoidable discrepency.

The queen of hearts in characteristic costume answered the door bell and Cupid (Master Burton Garlinghouse) with bow and arrow was perched on the stair. His aim was a little shaky perhaps but his appearance was very effective.

The rooms were everywhere decorated with festoons of pink and green hearts. The winter sunlight was excluded and a blaze of electricity lighted the handsome parlors, where twelve tables were arranged for the various progressive games of anagrams dissected hearts, archery contests and other games appropriate to the day.

The president, Mrs. T. C. Harris, made a few opening and explanatory remarks concerning the origin of the day and the games were called. Mrs. Look secured the first prize in contest "A Journey to Raphael" and Mrs. Helm the consolation prize.

After the games, the queen of hearts presided over the coffee urn at the head table and the other tables were laid for dainty refreshments. Miss McKenna delightfully sang two selections and Miss Ethel Slayton gave a fine instrumental preformance. About seventy-five guests took part in the festivities and thanked Mrs. McCann and the committee of arrangement for a very delightful afternoon.

The Euterpean Fraternity met Friday evening at Seaton W. Anderson's. Each member responded to the roll call by a definition of Romanticism, Chopin was the special subject and the following program selected entirely from the work of the "Raphael of the piano" was given:

Prelude—Miss Lydia Price.
Mazurka—Mrs. Hodges.
Nocturne—Miss Whittelsey.
Waltz—Miss Helen Anderson.
Polonaise—Miss Jackson.

This was the first of a series of studies on special composers alternating with the Nature studies in Music. The next open meeting will be held at John Freeman's March 7, the subject for that night will be "Evening." Through this Fraternity Tecumseh is to have the privelege of hearing the noted blind lecture pianist, Edward Baxter Perry, March 18.

Miss Lena Smith entertained at her home on Union street Friday evening the "Smart Set." The evening was spent at progressive 63. Five tables were filled and the prizes were won by Floyd and Vena Elliott. The house was tastefully decorated with hearts of all sizes. At eleven o'clock refreshments were served at the card tables which completed the pleasures of the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Snedecor entertained the ladies of the Auf Wieder Sehen club and their husbands at their home in a most pleasing manner. There were five tables of 63 players and the first prize was won by Mrs. J. H. Emery and the consolation by Mrs. Mrs. Bert Mize. Refreshments were served at the card tables which completed the pleasures of the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Brown entertained the Independent 63 club at their home Tuesday evening at luncheon, covers being laid for 17. Those present from out of town were Mr. and Mrs. Green, of Randolph Corners, and Mr. and Mrs. Freyer, of Franklin. The prizes were won by Mr. Freyer and Clarence Everhart.

The Flinch club was entertained by Miss Florence Jenkins last evening at her home on Chicago street. Refreshments were served and a good time in general was enjoyed. Miss Gertrude VanNess will entertain the same club next Monday evening.

Ray Howe was given a pleasant surprise Friday evening by a group of friends from Adrian and it was a complete success. Features of the evening were cards, music and singing and refreshments were enjoyed by 25 guests.

Mrs. Jas. Clark entertained a number of her lady friends at tea last Friday evening, the occassion being the celebration of her 25th wedding anniversary A pleasant time was had by all present.

Saved her Child's life

"In three weeks our chubby little boy was changed by Pneumonia almost to a skeleton," writes Mrs. W. Watkins, of Pleasant City, O. "A terrible cough set in, that in spite of a good doctor's treatment for several weeks, grew worse every day. We then used Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, and our darling was soon sound and well. We are sure this grand medicine saved his life." Millions know it's the only sure cure for coughs, colds and all lung diseases. C. A. Wright guarantee satisfaction, 50c, $1.00. Trial bottles free.

LARGE CROWDS

Present at the Several Sessions of the

FARMERS INSTITUTE

Many Lively Discussions were Held David Woodward again elected as President of the Institute

FRIDAY MORNING SESSION

Great interest was shown by the farmers of this vicinity during the two days the institute was held in Tecumseh. The Friday morning session was not called until 10:40 a. m., owing to the fact that the speaker was detained by the lateness of the morning train. Rev. Bower opened the meeting by an invocation. The president then introduced the first speaker in the person of Mr. Hull, of Eaton county, filling the place of A. M. Welch, of Ionia.

The subject for which Mr. Hull was chosen to speak upon was "Corn Growing" his experiments in this direction having proven successful, he delineated his method, which was as follows:

In the early fall he manured the soil, then plowed this under to a depth of four or five inches, which permits the particles of dirt being brought in contact with the air and thus developing the nitric acid, which is such an important element to a good soil, dragging is then resorted to and is continued until the corn is quite high, at which period the cultivator becomes necessary.

Mr. Hull demonstrated the manner in which the ground was made to diffuse the moisture taken in the spring, the top layer of the soil is kept very dry, so that the early rains penetrate to a considerable depth, this moisture is brought back to the roots by a process of nature due to capillary action, the loose dry dirt on the surface of the soil acts as a protection from the hot rays of the sun and stays the moisture near the roots of the corn, thus the farmer keeps it for his own use instead of furnishing for his neighbor. Mr. Hull being upon the program for further talks along this subject, he aptly concluded at this point. Questions were now asked by many interested members, all of which Mr. Hull answered with satis faction.

The leader in discussion with Mr. Hull was D. T. Hall. In many ways he agreed with the former. As a farmer Mr. Hall's experience has only covered five years, the better half of his life having been spent in active business, his being chosen as a speaker, lies in the fact that he has met with such marked success in his farming career. His method conforms in many ways to Mr. Hull's, when the time comes to shock the corn, he finds that 40 to 60 bundles are none too many for each shock. In reply to a former statement made by Mr. Hull to the effect that "Corn at 60 cents a bushel was too great a temptation for him to resist." Mr. Hall says, better place the corn as feed for hogs, a five dollar hog is worth more to me, than a 60 cent bushel of corn."

The discussion on this subject was continued by Mr. Moore, of Palmyra, who brought many interesting facts before the members.

P. B. Reynolds gave a method with which he has had considerable success. This consisted of a way to impart moisture to the corn by means of floating thus doing away with the roller. In answer to a question as "How and when to manure the land." Mr. Reynolds says. "Manure should be spread over the ground thinly and evenly, allowing no bunches to form and experience has proven to me that the earlier spread the better for the soil.

This ended the morning session and the meeting was adjourned until 1:30 p. m.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON SESSION

The afternoon session was opened by an instrumental selection rendered by Miss Blanche Macham and Mr. Morden, of Adrian.

President Woodward then gave a short talk on "Growing Seed Corn. His method consisted in planting about three kernels to the hill, after the corn has reached a good height the tassels are then cut off, this gives a better growth of corn. Pres. Woodward then made the motion that a few of the members try this plan and report at the institute next year. This discussion was carried further by Mr. Bye, of Ogden and D. T. Hall, of Tecumseh. P. B. Reynolds, of Owosso, gave a short talk on "Building and filling the silo." He classed the silo as "one of the long felt wants of the farmer," having for its object the furnishing of a cheaper food for cattle, which no economical farmer can well do without.

Mr. Reynolds has met with great success by using a square silo, the only advantage the round silo has over the square is that there are no corners to injure the packing. In building the silo 'tis better to have two small ones than one too large, also the silo must be air tight. This is very hard to accomplish in a silo, where the boards are placed in a perpendicular position, the boards should be laid horizontally this can be done better in the square silo. Mr. Reynolds devotes eight acres of corn to his silo, this should be taken at just the right period and not too green. The total expense of Mr. Reynolds' silo did not exceed $75. he, of course, doing much of the labor. In filling the silo, Mr. Reynolds says, "I generally devote two or three days and pack about 40 tons of corn per day, the longer you take for your packing the better results obtained.

Many questions were advanced, all of which Mr. Reynolds satisfactorily answered From his answers the following was obtained: That a special kind of cement was needed for foundation as the acid from the silage was injurious to most common kinds, also the larger the silo the more heat is generated by it, thus keeping it from freezing.

The leader in discussion was Mr. Holloway. His plan had been to feed steers on silage once per day and his cows two times per day.

A committee was chosen, consisting of Messrs Laing, Boyce, Richard, Bowen VanVie, Baker and Bay to select candidates for offices for the following year, their report to be given Saturday morning at 11 o'clock.

Dr. C. A. Waldron gave a highly interesting paper upon "Swine Disease," among other things a few of the following facts were brought out, he says, "There are three common diseases peculiar to the hog, pneumonia being the most common, the germs are conveyed in many ways, the air being the most common, the crows, sparrows and flies come in for their share of blame. Again our neighbor, after examining our stock, stops on his way home to tell his friends, together they examine their hogs and in this manner carrying the germs through a whole district. A great mistake is made in doping the hogs with "patent" medicines, as more harm is done than good. Taken altogether Dr. Waldron had a well prepared paper, showing considerable thought and research.

The Tipton Grange orchestra rendered two musical selections, the applause they gained showed clearly that they were not only "Grangers" but "Musicians" as well.

Mr. Hull was next announced to give a talk on "Feed and Care of the Dairy Cow." Quoting, he says, "People as a rule don't like dairying, but did you ever see a man make a success of anything, without first placing his whole ambition into whatever he attempts? This rule applies in the dairy business as well as in all others. The first thing is to select the right kind of cow. A cow for the dairy business should have a certain build, have the flesh where the most good will be derived from it and also the best of care. As to feeding the cow, the first thing to remember is that a cow expects her food regularly. Reports show that 60 per cent of all a cow eats goes to maintain her, the remaining 40 per cent should be profit. Good feed determines whether or not it shall be.

Silage has proven a Godsend in way of cheap food for the "dairy cow." If it wasn't for the silo the dairy man would have to go out of business. Last but not least, the care of the cow should be well looked after. The stable should be clean and the cow kept comfortable, while the milking should be done quickly and thoroughly.

The leaders in discussion were Frank Bryan and Jonah Waldron. The facts gained by them in the dairy business were given for the benefit of those present, their principals are the same in many ways. On one thing they all agree beyond dispute that no cow can be kept with profit without silage.

Mr. H. Moore, of Palmyra, continued the argument and remarked that some people expect the silage to carry three fourths of all expenses in feeding, although he didn't wish to discourage those who intend building a silo, they mustn't expect too much from silage as a feed. Mr. Moore ended the discussion for the afternoon. After a selection by Tipton Grange Orchestra, the session was called closed.

WOMANS MEETING AT M. E. CHURCH LECTURE ROOM FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

The womens meeting was called to order by Mrs. Jennie Waring, after which Mrs. Carrie Ives-Saunders was introduced and gave an interesting table talk on Domestic Science, the talk brought out a lively discussion. Next the children with their kindergarden work nicely entertained the audience.

Mrs. M. R. Keyser presented a paper on the "Mother and the Home," which showed much careful thought and study. The substance of the paper was taken up with the proper training of the children in the home. At the close of the paper, many minutes were given over to the discussion of this subject.

"The Women of the 19th Century" by Fern DePuy held the close attention of all present. The paper as a whole showed fine literary ability on the part of the writer, and was greatly appreciased by all who heard it. The music for the meeting was furnished by the Tecumseh and Franklin Farmers club ladies and Miss Blanche Macham, of Holloway.

FRIDAY EVENING SESSION.

Pres. Woodward opened the evening session by giving a short address on "Growing Clover," after which music was furnished by the "Sunbeam Quartette" consisting of Messrs. Dickinson, Abrams, Slater and Maddox. The speakers, Prof. Wreidt, of Clinton, and Prof. Hensel, not being present, the subject, "Schools, School Houses and School Grounds," was posponed until later upon the program.

P. B. Reynolds was next announced to give a short talk on "Beautifying and Improving the Farm Home," during which he says: "Many little improvements tend towards beautifying the home, the trees, the hedge and the out buildings. Many people set their trees in straight lines, thinking in this way to add attraction to the home. Now my idea is just contrary. Why not set trees more as nature would have them, not all of one kind but a variety." A question was here asked Mr. Reynolds, "Whether or not to water trees when young and from what source the best trees were obtained? In reply Mr. Reynolds said: By all means get the tree as young as possible, the more care taken in selecting the tree, the better results one obtains in the end. Many people water their trees when young, but if this process is resorted too, one must continue it or the tree will not flourish as well.

Now as to the hedge, how much prettier a small home is, that is surround by a hedge, than one that stands alone without even a bush to add attraction to it. Take for instance a cozy little farm house with a number of nice shade trees, a little drive-way winding its way in a graceful manner towards the house, the yard containing a few nice bushes. Do you think, brother farmers, we need scheme and plan to keep our boys at home evenings? No! give them an attractive home, a brighter side of life. and we may always know where their evenings are spent.

Mr. Moore continued the discussion and said: "If the poor blind poet could appreciate 'Home sweet Home' how much more thanks we should give for better opportunities. 'Tis the home that models the character of our boys and as much blame rests with the parents as with the boy, if he has to seek the saloons for an evenings entertainment."

After a recitation by Miss Florence Lane, of Holloway, Prof. Kellogg discussed the subject of "Schools, School houses and School grounds.' In speaking of the schools he says: "In Lenawee county we have 40 district schools, in which the number of pupils do not exceed 20, from this it can readily be seen that these schools are rather an expensive investment. Mr. Reynolds has told you about beautifying the home. why isn't the school as important, a little papering done now and then, a coat of paint added to the outside of the school house, a few pictures added to the interior will do much towards improving our school houses. In sending our children to school, the parent should work with the teacher and the teacher with the parent, in doing this more may be accomplished. In reference to pictures suitable for the school, Mr. Kellogg brought as a specimen, the picture of Longfellow, taken from one of the high school rooms, such pictures are very low in price and are such that all schools should be able to possess them.

Alexander Richards continued the discussions and expressed his opinion that there was no attraction whatever to our school houses, but was interrupted by Pres. Woodward, who said Mr. Richard's argument would not hold good for the interior, as it was an established fact that the schools contained some pretty school-mams. Among assertions made by Mr. Richard were the following: "Our schools as they stand to-day are a disgrace, the standard is lower than 30 years ago and teachers complain that they are unable to keep order in their rooms."

Mr. Bye in reply to last statment said: "If our boys get proper training at home no trouble would be given the teachers in school, the little 'Red School house' will never be done away with. The discussion was carried furthur by D. T. Hall and Mr. Hull. Miss Eolah Brown concluded the evening's program with a recitation.

SATURDAY MORNING SESSION

The greater part of Saturday morning was taken up by the election of officers for the coming year.

Mr. Hull's discussion on "Crops for the Silo" was well received and followed by a lively debate. Mr. Hull says "I don't quite understand why I should be sent here to Tecumseh, together with Mr. Reynolds, but perhaps it was the reason the minster's son gave, when his father discovered him shooting beans at the congregation. The boy seeing that his father was about to speak to him said, "Never mind, father, you go on with the sermon, I'll keep 'em awake.

This is the reason perhaps why I am here "to keep 'em awake." Now in filling my silo, I generally take one day, the neighbors in our vicinity all taking hold and helping each other, as the time for filling the silo comes during the busy season, one day is all I can spare for the work. I place three men in my silo to do tramping, two of them tramp the silage around the outside while the third is placed in the center. It is best to cut the corn as fine as possible, don't be afraid of getting it too fine, if large leaves are left, they permit the air to collect around them and thus injure the silage.

The only fault found with silage is that it does not contain enough protene, and consequently many different foods have been mixed with it. Cow peas have proven the best food to mix in the silage. The cow pea is a warm weather plant. I find the "Whip-poor-will" variety the best, these I plant about the 20th of June, each hill containing about four peas and three feet apart.

Again many people mix clover in with their silage, good results have been obtained in this way, the bundle of corn is placed upon the cutter and as this runs through a fork or two of clover is placed upon it. Wheat is also used, but this is rather expensive. Many people prefer beets, but experiments have proven that with one pound of silage, more milk can be obtained than by feeding the same amount of beets.

One great mistake common to farmers is that corn is placed in the silo too green. the corn contains too much water and not enough nutriment in the stalk."

Hoyt Wheian, of Tipton, continued the discussion. He says, "In mixing peas with my silage I have not had very good results. In fact my crop of peas did not turn out well, I have no doubt whatever but that if I could get good peas to mix with my silage, it would make the better food.

This subject brought out a lively discussion among the members, as it was one that has formed a prominent part throughout the several meetings. The report of the committee on nominations was given with the following result:

Pres.—David Woodward, Clinton, Mich.

Sec. and Treas.—Smith Munger, Tipton, Mich.

Stage Makeup.

A noted comedian, who is noted for his skill in the art of makeup, says: "Lines will never help an actor to play a part if he has not made a study of the character itself. The true artist looks to his voice as much as to his wigs. He wants a large box of voices as well as of makeup. It is absurd for a man to go into character business unless he can disguise his voice and speak several dialects to start with. Character work is no plum duff for any one. I've seen men who seemed to fancy that a Lancashire dialect would do first rate for a Scotchman and that any old thing was good enough for a heathen Chinee. A character actor must disguise face, walk, voice, mannerisms; in short, he must take his own personality and bury it deep."

A Way Ants Have.

Lord Avebury declares that ants that maintain their sobriety make a great distinction in their treatment of the intoxicated stranger and the fellow citizen who has succumbed to his blandishments. He inebriated fifty ants, twenty-five from one nest and twenty-five from another, and put them all into the nest from which one lot had been taken. The inhabitants at once took the helpless strangers and threw them into the water, while those who were citizens of the nest were carried tenderly away into remote corners to recover from their festivity at leisure.

Where London Drinks.

Originality was evidently not one of the strong points of the godfathers of public houses, as the majority of names are borne by any number from two to a dozen or more premises. Where, however, they have determined to get something fresh they have undoubtedly done so. The Antigallican, Bag of Nails, Blade Bone, Bombay Grab, David and Harp, Experienced Fowler, Frying Pan, Grave Maurice, Greenland Fishery, Rent Day, Sash and Cocoa Tree, Old Blind Beggar and Ticket Porter are all names to be found within the metropolis, as well as the inexplicable combinations of Cock and Harp, Five Bells and Bladebone, French Horn and Artichoke, Crown and Can, Bell and Mackerel, Cock and Neptune, Jolly Sailors and Little Billet, Ship and Blue Ball, Ship and Shovel, Sun and Thirteen Cantons and the King's Head and Eight Bells. His Fluent Fount of Tears.

There are funny incidents in the life of a photographer. A man came in the other day and looked over all the samples, asking the price of each.

"Do you want a sitting?" I asked.

"I don't see nothin' like what I want," he replied.

I told him if he would indicate what he wanted I might arrange it.

"You see, it's like this," he began. "I had a girl that I loved, and we was going to git married. She had her things made up, and we was all but ready, when she was taken ill and died. And what I wanted was a picture of me sittin' on her grave weepin'."

I was touched at the homely story of grief and told him I could send a man with him to the grave and have the picture taken as he desired.

"It's some distance," he said. "It's over in Ireland. I expect it 'ud cost a lot to send over your traps for what I want?"

I said it would.

"I thought," he answered, "that mebbe you could rig up a grave here in your shop and I would weep on it and it would do just as well. It's no trouble for me to weep anywhere."—Edinburgh Scotsman.

The Ring of Cheops.

Cheops was the builder of the pyramid which bears his name, and, as if to make the structure perpetuate his deeds for all time to come, the very stones and bricks of which it is composed are stamped with his name. Cheops lived nearly 2,500 years ago, his great pyramid being an antiquity in the days when the great nations of old were in their youth, and yet we of this twentieth century can have the satisfaction of looking upon the very ring he wore so proudly upon his finger! The hieroglyphics on the ring are minutely accurate and beautifully executed, the ring itself being of finest gold and weighing nearly an ounce. The oval signet bears the name of Cheops, which is in hieroglyphics in perfect accord with the stamp on the bricks of the great pyramid. This remarkable antiquity was found in a tomb at Ghizeh. It now reposes in the museum of the New York Historical society.

A Couple of Jokers.

Judge Joseph Aspinall's reputation as a humorist on the bench is proverbial, but when off the bench he rarely jokes. Hence it was that Assistant District Attorney Martin W. Littleton, the after dinner spellbinder, was taken by surprise when the judge calmly inquired:

"Martin, you are interested in athletics. Tell me the name of the champion shot putter."

"I'll have to pass that, judge."

"Well, then, what's the matter with cannon?"

Mr. Littleton reeled from the impact, but, quickly recovering, replied:

"Ah, yes, very neat. But, by the way, I see you are one of the entries in the big paper chase."

"Paper chase? What paper chase?" said the judge unguardedly.

"The chase for greenbacks, judge. Good day. Glad to have met you."—New York Times.

How to Distinguish Tender Beef.

Meat, to be wholesome, must come from a healthy animal; to be nutritious, from a well nourished one. Much used muscles absorb much food material, making rich, juicy meat. This is, however, tougher than that of parts less used, because the connective tissue and fiber increase as well as the contents of the muscle tubes.

The lean of good beef is firm, elastic and when first cut purplish red, the surface becoming bright red and moist after exposure to the air. The tender cuts are fine grained and well mottled with fat; a thick layer of firm, light, straw colored fat extends over the rib and loin cuts; the kidney suet is white and crumbly. Flabby, dark or coarse beef with yellow fat is poor. If it has little fat, it is from an old or underfed creature.—Beatrice Raven in American Queen.

French Bread Laws.

The French baker is not only required to conform to laws regarding weight, but he is also told at what price he must sell his bread. He is further required to deposit a certain sum of money in the hands of the municipal authorities as a surety of good behavior. In the large fortified cities he has to keep a specified quantity of flour on hand to provide for warlike emergencies.

In Germany laws of similar import are in existence and are enforced with such severity that no baker ever dreams of defying them.

He Makes It Pay.

Benson—Talk about the lamentable state of the public service! Why, there's Nestor, for instance. He has been in public office for twenty-five years, and what, I should like to know, has he ever accomplished?

A HASTY MARRIAGE.

And the Bride Was Not the One the Wooer Sought.

Oliver Cromwell was so great a man that he dwarfed his surroundings, and it is singular how little the majority of people knew about the family and family life of this "the most typical Englishman of all time." He had three daughters, the youngest of whom was Frances. Her attractions must have been considerable. The young woman had several love affairs, but certainly the one that had a most amusing termination was her flirtation with her father's chaplain, Jerry White.

One day the protector surprised Jerry on his knees in the very act of kissing the lady's hand. Cromwell coldly demanded the meaning of the scene, and Jerry, with a pretty wit, exclaimed that he had long been courting "that young gentlewoman, my lady's woman," although without success. He was now therefore humbly praying her ladyship to intercede for him.

Cromwell turned at once to the waiting woman and requested to be informed why she refused the honor his friend, Mr. White, would do her. The young woman, fully equal to the occasion, replied magnanimously that if Mr. White intended her that honor she would not be so churlish as to deny him. "Call Godwin," returned Cromwell, and the pair were married straightway.

Realization of Age.

Two attorneys who had slipped past the meridian of life without hardly observing the fact were talking about ages while eating a deliberate luncheon in the Lawyers' club a couple of days ago when one of them told a story which embodies the experience of more than one man.

"It really came to me with a little shock," he said. "I took a sleeper at Buffalo for New York, and there were only half a dozen men aboard when I retired for the night. In the morning while in the toilet room brushing my hair I saw in the mirror the reflection of the back of an old gentleman I did not remember seeing before. He appeared much older than any man I had noticed on the car the night before, and I made up my mind that he had come aboard after I had gone to bed.

"I watched the reflection while arranging my hair and then turned, intending to speak to the old gentleman. You can imagine my surprise when I found that I had been looking at the reflection of my own back."—New York Herald.

Musical Sounds and Noise.

It is a curious fact that musical sounds fly farther and are heard at a greater distance than those which are more loud and noisy. If we go on the outside of a town during a fair, at the distance of a mile we hear the musical instruments, but the din of the multitude, which is so overpowering in the place, can scarcely be heard, the noise dying on the spot. To those who are conversant with the power of musical instruments the following observations will be understood: The violins made at Cremona about the year 1600 are superior in tone to any of a later date, age seeming to dispossess them of their noisy qualities and leaving nothing but the pure tone. If a modern violin is played by the side of one of those instruments, it will appear much the louder of the two, but on receding a hundred paces when compared with the Cremona it will scarcely be heard.

Tortured Women.

The married Druse women of Mount Lebanon, in Asia Minor, labor under a distinct species of torture endured under their peculiar head veil. It is attached to a long horn or tambor, usually made of metal, which is fastened to the head by means of a cushion. These habaras are of an infinite variety of colors, embellished with tassels, bands of embroidery and fringes. Underneath this again is worn a face veil of coarse thick net so heavily embroidered that one can scarcely see or breathe through it. This is fastened close to the face and the habara drawn tightly over it. They are so muffled in the folds of these clumsy stuffs that the stranger has to look twice before he can decide whether they are advancing or retreating, and the poor wretches suffer acutely under the weight of their veils.

Told Her Story.

The little daughter of a man who had been chosen for jury duty in London the other day went to the judge and said: "Please, sir, father can't come. He can't put on his boots."

The judge asked the nervous little creature what was the matter with her father. Her hesitation showed that she had not been sufficiently equipped for the complete deception of the wary official. He repeated his question.

"Well, sir," she said, looking straight into the judge's twinkling eyes, "father don't wear boots. He's got wooden legs. I wasn't told to tell you anything else, sir; that's all."

Unfeeling Chinese.

A typical scene in a Manchurian village is thus described by a correspondent of the London News:

"That afternoon we pulled up near three shanties on a woodside, and a gang of Chinese, all squabbling and making noises like dogs growling over bones, fought with one another to get on a platform where a boiler was chained. There was a scuffle. One Chinese was pushed backward and fell. His head hit the metal and cracked like a nut. He gave a wriggle and died. The Russians who saw the accident were affected. The Chinese laughed. He lay for an hour in the sun until I undid his sleeping rug and spread it over his face. He was soon forgotten. A Chinese threw some hot water over a growling dog and made it howl. At this there were shrieks of mirth.

"The engine puffed and groaned and jerked the wagons into progress. The last I saw of this spot was two Chinamen pitching mud at the same dog to keep it from sniffing at the body of the dead."

Sense In Proverbs.

There is a deal of sound sense in the proverbs of a nation. Earl Russell defined a proverb as being the wit of one man and the wisdom of many, and the aptness of this is well shown in the following from the Spanish, "Since we cannot get what we like, let us like what we get." The thought is as old as the race of mankind, but ages passed before one man hit upon the happy expression of it. This saying from the Chinese is a whole homily on pride in one sentence, "When a tree is blown down, it shows that the branches are longer than the roots."

For a concise expression of the lofty aspirations of youth and the sober achievements of riper years take this sentence from Henry D. Thoreau, "The youth gets together his materials to build a bridge to the moon, or perchance a palace or temple on the earth, and at length the middle aged man concludes to build a woodshed with them."

Did Not Know What Was Going On.

There is a fact about the French revolution more wonderful in its way than any which can be discovered in old newspapers. It is the fact, gathered from private letters of the period, that in those stirring times, when all the world was ringing with the events in Paris, there were actually people in that city living in absolute ignorance of the horrors around them. There was no reign of terror for them. They lived veritable recluses in their quiet suburban houses, hearing nothing, reading nothing of the turmoil which startled and terrified the nations. One wonders much what manner of people these oysterlike folks might be. Nothing sounds more incredible today. Yet there are many things in history not half so well authenticated, though history is curiously silent on so strange a circumstance.

Temperament and Exercise.

Careful tests and observations made at the Yale psychological laboratory have demonstrated the importance of studying individual temperament before prescribing a system of physical exercise. A nervous temperament, for example, requires a different treatment from that required by a phlegmatic temperament, without regard to the physical condition of the subject.

The mental factors are more necessary than the muscular in the development of strength. A nervous person should never be required to take heavy exercise. A phlegmatic person, on the contrary, requires it. The phlegmatic temperament indicates reserve energy in both muscles and nerve cells, while the nervous temperament has less reserve power, but greater ability to use the energy at hand.—Philadelphia Record.

Mirrors of the Israelites.

The earliest mirrors of which mention is made in history were in use among the Israelites in the time of Moses. That gentleman, as recorded in the Bible, commanded in a certain emergency that these articles should be transformed into wash basins for the priests. They were made of brass. Doubtless similar utensils of this and other materials were in use long before that. At that same period black glass was employed for the purpose, as well as transparent glass with black foil on the back. It is related that the Spaniards found mirrors of polished black stone, both convex and concave, among the natives of South America.

What the Truffle Is.

The ancient Romans, at whose sumptuous banquets truffles played an important role, supposed that their existence was one of the material results of thunder. More modern botanists have classed it as a species of mushroom, but it can scarcely be termed such. To be exact, the truffle is a tuberculous fungus, a sort of morbid extravasation of vegetable sugars analogous to oak balls or nutgalls and doubtless originating, as these latter, from the sting of an insect.

Accidental Discharge of a Pun.

A capital pun may arise by pure accident, as recorded in Bucke's "Book of Table Talk:"

"A Mr. Alexander Gun was dismissed from a post in the customs of Edinburgh for circulating some false rumor. The dismissal is said to have been thus noted in the customs book at the time, 'A. Gun discharged for making a false report.'"

FLYING BULLETS.

One Way by Which They May Be Seen After Leaving the Rifle.

"I don't believe the story that bullets can be seen when fired from a gun," said the old soldier. "You know in the army there is a theory that men have seen bullets, but they never lived to tell of it, because the bullets were going straight for them and hit them in the eye. The only men who have seen the ordinary rifle bullets in transit are dead."

"No, they aren't," said the old hunter. "I have seen many bullets flying. One way by which you can see them plainly is by dipping them in glycerin before firing."

"Yes, you might trace them by the smoke then caused by air friction," said the veteran, "but you can't see the bullets."

"Oh, yes, you can," retorted the hunter. "I have watched them often during target practice, and any one can see the large caliber bullets, though I won't say as much for the tiny modern missiles. The way to see a flying bullet is to get a little to one side of the shooter, about five feet away from him, say. Then run an imaginary line from the muzzle of his gun to the target. Let your eyes rest on a space of light colored ground exactly on this line, and when he fires you will see something dark, like a bee, flit past the light colored space. That is the bullet. Of course by the time the eye tells the brain it sees the missile the bullet has struck the target, but you have seen it all right."

Death In Nightmare.

One of the late beliefs of the medical profession is that many people die each year while asleep from heart disease that is brought on by nightmares or bad dreams. A specialist on the heart said recently that in his opinion in nine cases out of ten of deaths in bed heart action was stopped by fear which injurious dreams brought on.

"I have taken part in thousands of autopsies," said this expert, "and in many cases made a study of the habits of those who died. I found that the majority had been sufferers from nightmares or other nocturnal disturbances of dreamland and that frequently they woke up in the middle of the night completely exhausted and gravely alarmed through some particularly vivid dream. If people are frightened to death while awake when they have their full senses and hope for relief, why is it not doubly likely that they die from fright while asleep when their courage is dwarfed by faculties temporarily affected?"

China's Antiquity.

China's antiquity is a part of her colossal proportions. China's early writers record a mythological history covering tens of thousands of years, but this period ends with the establishment of the capital of the empire at Kaifungfu in the thirty-first century B. C. Her legendary history extends from this time to 2205 B. C., at which time, it may be said, China's real history begins. The ancient history of China extends from 2205 B. C. to 298 B. C. Her mediæval history begins there and extends to the time of the Mongol conquests in 1215 A. D.

With the founding of the Mongol dynasty China's modern history begins. The Mongols were driven out by the Mings in 1368 A. D. The Mings were the last native dynasty that ruled over China, and their control lasted from 1368 to 1644. Under the title of the Ta Tsing (the Great Pure) dynasty the Mantchoos have ruled China since A. A. 1644.

Maternal Love of the Whale.

No other member of the animal kingdom displays more maternal affection than the whale, especially if its calf is harpooned. The harpooner neverthrows his harpoon into the little one with the the intention of killing it, for if this is done the mother will instantly forsake it. If alive and struggling, however, the dam can be easily enticed toward the boat to meet its fate. Knowing this, the whale fishermen always strike a calf if possible and thus often make captures that could not be effected under other circumstances.

As soon as the dam becomes aware of the snaring of her young she rushes toward it, encourages it to swim away and even assists it by taking it under her fin. She seems to lose all regard for her own safety and boldly attacks the boat containing the whalemen or circles about it totally regardless of the harpoons that are hurled at her and enter her flesh.

Pranks of Nature.

A shower of a remarkable character occurred in Sicily on April 24, 1781. On the morning of that day every exposed place within an extensive district was found covered with a gray water which, being evaporated, left a deposit nearly a quarter of an inch in thickness. It was determined that this solid matter must have come from Mount Etna. It is certain that vast quantities of solid substances are constantly afloat in the atmosphere. The sunsets all over the world are redder to this day on account of the dust from the mighty eruption in the strait of Sunda years ago, which has not yet entirely settled.

They Worship the Drum.

Among the Samoiedes and the tribes of northern Asiatic Russia the drum passes almost as an idol. They address it, erect it in their hut, and the priests of the superstition by the aid of the divine instrument effect that magical "disappearance" which has puzzled all travelers from Sir Hugh Willoughby downward to account for and has given rise to as much guesswork at its elucidation as the feats of the Indian jugglers. The Samoiede, after beating his drum and working up the senses of his spectators to a pitch of great excitement, mysteriously vanishes into thin air before the eyes of all. Civilized travelers naturally hold that it is a trick. The Samoiedes themselves declare that the power resides in the drum idol. The peculiar thing is that neither one party nor the other has been able to explain how the vanishing occurs

The Uses of the Sword.

The uses to which the sword has been put seem to have been almost as varied as its appearance when we recall the anecdote told of Charlemagne, who said, as he used the pommel of his sword to put his stamp on treaties, "I sign them with this end and with the other I will take care that they are kept."

Question Answered.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Get Green's Prize Almanac at J. J. Orr's.

Wyandotte and Battle Creek Suffer Large Fires.

ONE LIFE BELIEVED LOST

Big Adventist Sanitarium at Battle Creek Burns in Early Morning Hours —Wyandotte Loses a $70,000 Trunk Factory.

Battle Creek, Mich., Feb. 19.—The Battle Creek sanitarium, owned by the Seventh Day Adventists, burned to the ground early Tuesday morning, entailing the probable loss of one human life and destroying property valued at from $300,000 to $400,000.

The blaze started in the basement of the sanitarium proper and ran up to the top of the elevator shaft before discovered. From this point it began to spread through the top floor, the flames gradually communicating themselves to the floors below. The fire department, although called almost immediately, was entirely unable to cope with the flames, which within a half hour of the time of the turning in of the alarm, were lighting the surrounding country, owing to the elevated position of the sanitarium.

At a late hour last night but one person remained unaccounted for, Abner Case of Bath City, N. Y., who was at the sanitarium with his wife and daughter, has not been located, and is believed to have been cremated in the building. His wife and daughter were rescued.

Nearly all the guests went out in their night clothing and bare feet. Fine clothes, money and jewelry, including many valuable diamonds, were left behind, and lost. All kinds of conveyances were utilized to take invalids to places where they could get protection and care. Many were going about with bare feet in the snow and ice, others were carried away on cots.

Mrs. H. C. McDaniels of Eldorado, Ark., crazed with fright, leaped from a fourth story window and broke her right leg.

One patient who on Monday underwent a severe surgical operation rose from his bed and walked down two flights of stairs. A fireman, Henry Lucas, of Battle Creek, was seriously injured by falling bricks.

The halls of the advent college building have been temporarily turned into a dormitory. Many patients have been taken to the City hospital and to private houses.

The fire consumed the main sanitarium, the hospital, both five-story buildings, the house of Elder Salisbury, which stood near, and Wood's barber shop.

The rebuilding of the institution, it is understood, will be immediately begun.

The buildings were well covered by insurance.

Wyandotte, Mich., Feb. 19.—The Beals & Selkirk trunk factory, with the company's spring stock of goods, was destroyed by fire at noon Tuesday, entailing a loss of $70,000.

The factory proper was of brick, 275 feet long, 50 feet wide, and three stories high. A wooden store room, covered with corrugated iron, 49x100 feet and two stories high, and another store room of wood, 25x50 feet, were also destroyed. There was a heavy wind blowing at the time, and the greatest wonder is expressed that the fire did not spread over a greater area.

The insurance on the factory, according to Mr. Selkirk, a member of the firm, was $47,500, and was divided among a dozen companies.

Marshall Saloonist Stabbed.

Marshall, Mich., Feb. 19.—Charles Hunter, a well-known saloonman of this city, lies in a critical condition at his home on West Green street as the result of a stabbing affair which occurred in his business place shortly before closing time last night. Jerome Putman, a horse-breaker, entered Hunter's saloon and demanded a pint of brandy. It was refused him, and as Hunter started to put him out Putman drew a knife from his pocket and stabbed Hunter just above the right temple, inflicting a very serious wound. The cut is an ugly one and severed an artery. A complaint has been sworn out for Putman's arrest.

Mershon, East Saginaw, planer bed; William A. Fendry, Detroit, button-making machine; George B. Sewell, Detroit, automatic release for brake cylinders; Morris L. and W. D. Warner, Hudson, gas separator.

Car Dropped Fifty Feet.

Durand, Mich., Feb. 19.—Monday night a car in an eastbound freight train on the D., G. H. & M. railroad jumped the track on a bridge at Vernon and fell 50 feet into the river below. A number of other cars were badly wrecked and trains were blocked for the night.

HONORS UNDIVIDED

President's Opinion on Sampson-Schley Affair.

HE MAKES FINAL DECISION

Firmly Supports the Decision Rendered by President McKinley—No Excuse for Continuing Controversy and Wants It Dropped.

Washington, Feb. 20.—Relative to the battle of Santiago and to the dispute which has ever since then been kept hot as to which one, Sampson or Schley, was in command, and to whom should be given the credit, President Roosevelt on Wednesday made public an extended reply. In part it is as follows:

"White House, Feb. 18, 1902.

"I have received the appeal of Admiral Schley and the answer thereto from the navy department. I have examined both with the utmost care, as well as the preceding appeal to the secretary of the navy. I have read through all the testimony taken before the court and the statements of the counsel for Admirals Sampson and Schley; have examined all the official reports of every kind in reference to the Santiago naval campaign, copies of the log books and signal books, and the testimony before the court of claims, and have also personally had before me the four surviving captains of the five ships, aside from those of the two admirals, who were actively engaged at Santiago.

"It appears that the court of inquiry was unanimous in its findings of facts and unanimous in its expressions of opinion on most of its finding of fact. No appeal is made to me from the verdict of the court on these points where it was unanimous. I have, however, gone carefully over the evidence on these points also. I am satisfied that on the whole the court did substantial justice.

"We can, therefore, for our present purposes, dismiss consideration of so much of the appeal as relates to anything except the battle. As regard this, the point raised in the appeal is between Admiral Sampson and Admiral Schley, as to which was in command and as to which was entitled to the credit, if either of them was really entitled to any unusual and pre-eminent credit by any special exhibition of genius, skill and courage.

"The appeal of Admiral Schley to me is not, as to this, the chief point he raises, really an appeal from the decision of the court of inquiry. Five-sixths of the appeal is devoted to this question of command and credit; that is, to matter which the court of inquiry did not consider. What I have to decide, therefore, is whether or not President McKinley did injustice in the matter. This necessarily involves a comparison of the actions of the different commanders engaged."

He then gives in detail accounts by the five officers in command of the boats. Statements from Admiral Phelps, who is dead, he took from magazine articles and personal letters. He quotes Phelps as saying: "Admiral Sampson was commander-in-chief before, during and after the action."

Capt. Clark's statement is as follows: "The credit for the blockade which led up to the fight is, of course, Admiral Sampson's."

The following is Admiral Evans's statement: "The credit for the blockade, for the arrangement of the ships at the opening of the fight, and for the first movements forward into the fight must of course belong to Admiral Sampson, whose orders we were putting into effect."

The following is Admiral Taylor's statement: "I considered Admiral Sampson present and in command." Commander Wainwright's statement is: "Of course, Admiral Sampson was present and in command."

President Roosevelt then recites at length the battle as he understood it, closing by saying: "These are the facts as set forth above in the statements of the captains and elsewhere in their official reports and testimony. They leave no room for doubt on any important point.

"The question of command is in this case nominal and technical. Admiral Sampson's ship, the New York, was seen at the outset of the fight from all other ships except the Brooklyn. Four of these five ships' captains have testified that they regarded him as present and in command.

"It was a captain's fight. Therefore the credit to which each of the two is entitled rests on matters apart from the claim of nominal command over the squadron; for so far as the actual fight was concerned, neither one nor the other, in fact, exercised any command.

"Sampson was hardly more than technically in the fight. His real claim for credit rests upon his work as commander-in-chief; upon the excellence of the blockade; on the preparedness of the squadron; upon the arrangement of the ships head-on in a semicircle around the harbor; and the standing orders in accordance with which they moved to the attack of the Spaniards when the latter appeared. For all these things the credit is his.

"Admiral Schley is rightly entitled—as is Captain Cook—to the credit on what the Brooklyn did in the fight. On the whole, she did well; but I agree with the unanimous finding of the three admirals who composed the court of inquiry as to the loop. It seriously marred the Brooklyn's otherwise excellent record, being in fact the one grave mistake made by any American ship that day.

"In short, as regards Admirals Sampson and Schley, I find that President McKinley did absolute justice and that there will be no warrant for reversing his action. Both admirals are now on the retired list. In concluding their report, the members of court of inquiry, Admirals Dewey, Denham and Ramsay, unite in stating that they recommend that no further action be had in the matter. With this recommendation I most heartily concede. There is no excure whatever on either side for any further agitation of this unhappy controversy. To keep it alive would merely do damage to the navy and to the country.

Fly-Wheel Burst.

Spartanburg, S. C., Feb. 20.—As the result of the bursting of a fly-wheel on one of the engines of the power house of the Spartanburg Electric Light & Power Co. here Wednesday, one man was killed and two injured. The engine on which the fly-wheel burst was entirely destroyed and was one of the largest engines used for supplying power to run trolley cars in this city.

REGULAR KLONDIKE

Gold and Diamonds in the Ashes of Sanitarium.

WHO WILL OWN THE FINDINGS?

Battle Creek's Burned Institution to Be Immediately Rebuilt—Kellogg Is Perfecting Plans — Citizens Held Sympathetic Mass Meeting.

Battle Creek, Mich., Feb. 20.—Five hundred thousand dollars in diamonds and jewelry in a space 300x100 feet! This beats a Klondike mine, yet such is the condition which confronts the people of Battle Creek. The latest estimate on the losses of the guests in the sanitarium fire places them at the above figure. Many of the valuable diamonds were undoubtedly consumed in the fierce flames, but others probably fell to the basement and are now in the debris. The gold in the jewelry, even if melted, will make exceedingly rich picking, and the question arises, who will it belong to, if found. Certainly the guests would be unable to recognize their own if pulled out in the shape of nuggets, and it is questionable if the laborers would be allowed to keep what they may find.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Grebe of Lancaster, Pa., lost $3,000 in valuables and Mrs. Grebe's $500 sealskin. Mrs. I. P. Baldwin, another guest, lost 100 diamonds, which were in her trunk. Rev. Ira D. Sankey, the famous evengelist, lost the manuscript of his work on "The Story of the Hymns." The misfortune will necessitate a long delay in the publication of the book.

While it is not anticipated that any of the jewels have survived the heat intact, it is thought possible that some may have been dropped from the upper floors in the general collapse of the building, and there cooled in the flood of water poured on the blaze by the firemen. The workmen who will soon be set to work clearing away wreckage will be closely watched, and some scheme will be devised for a division of the treasure found in the ashes, among those who lost it.

Dr. J. H. Kellogg, the physician in charge of the institution, arrived yesterday and immediately started the plans for the building which is to replace the burned structure. He states that there will be no doubt as to the location of the new structure on the site of the old one. While residents of Berrien Springs, where the Adventist college is located, are anxious to secure the building, Dr. Kellogg says that the reputation of Battle Creek as a health resort is too strong to be cast aside.

A big meeting was held in the tabernacle last evening for the purpose of expressing sympathy of the community with the sanitarium management on account of the big fire that destroyed two out of six main buildings Tuesday morning. Three thousand five hundred people were present and speeches were made by Evangelist Ira D. Sanky, Brooklyn; Col. H. H. Hadley, New York, both patients at the sanitarium. Sankey and wife were among those who came down on the fire escapes. Other speakers were E. C. Nichols, E. C. Hinman, and others representing business, professional and church interests of the city. A set of resolutions were adopted expressing sympathy and desire to aid in rebuilding of the sanitarium. Dr. J. H. Kellogg, the head of the institution, spoke, telling at length of the growth of the institution and plans for the future. Building will be commenced soon and it is hoped $400,000 worth of new buildings will be ready by September 1. In the meantime, 350 patients can be handled in dormitories and rooms of the Advent college.

Twice Tried to Die.

Newberry, Mich., Feb. 20.—Twice during the past few weeks Arthur Payne, a 15-year-old boy of this village, has attempted to commit suicide, his last endeavor almost being successful. Last Saturday, upon some fancied wrong, the boy left home and went to a cave which had been dug in the river bank. In this he built a fire and was slowly being smothered when located by the police, who had been summoned. A shotgun covered the entrance of the cave and warnings to shoot kept the officers at a distance until, overcome by the smoke, the boy was finally dragged into the air and revived. Young Payne is said to be weak-minded and he will probably be committed to the asylum.

Clash of Authority at Norway.

Norway, Mich., Feb. 20.—Mayor Springer of this city has tendered his resignation to the council as a result of a clash of authority with the city health officer. The trouble was over an order by the mayor to reopen the schools and churches, closed during the recent smallpox scare, and its countermanding by the health officer.

MICHIGAN BRIEFS.

The ninth annual convention of the State Gas association began at Kalamazoo Wednesday.

William R. Smith of Sparta has announced himself as a candidate for governor of the state to run on the prohibition ticket.

The Michigan Central railroad has granted pensions of $50 to three of its old engineers, Charles Lake, Peter Slayson and John Widmayer.

The proposition to bond the city of Dowagiac for new school buildings at an expenditure of $30,000, lacked about 30 of the necessary two-thirds majority. It will be brought up again.

Top of His Head Gone.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 20.—Samuel W. Rollin, an employe of the Powers & Walker Casket Co., was looking down an elevator shaft in the building Wednesday morning when the elevator came down and took off the top of his scalp, including a considerable piece of his skull. He is still alive and may recover. Doctors will try to wire the broken bone back into place.

Young Bridegroom Killed.

Cadillac, Mich., Feb. 20.—E. F. Beckley, aged 23, was killed in Cobbs & Mitchell's sawmill Wednesday morning. He was putting a belt on a pulley, when he slipped and was crushed between the pilley and elevator. He had been married only three months.

ONLY AFTER GOLD

England's Whole Purpose, Boers Believe, for War.

WANT U. S. TO INTERVENE

Rep. Cochran Receives Letter From Boer Delegates—Believe England Would Not Dare Refuse to Send Delegates to Congress of Powers.

Washington, Feb. 19.—Rep. Cochran of Missouri two weeks ago introduced a resolution inviting Paul Kruger to visit the United States as the guest of this country. Yesterday Mr. Cochran received a letter signed by three members of the Boer delegation quartered at Brussels thanking him and all who are supporting his efforts for the noble interest they are taking in the two Boer republics. The letter reviews, from the Boer standpoint, the causes which led up to the war and declares that Great Britain invented pretext after pretext to bring on the conflict, and that her whole purpose was to secure the extensive gold mines of the Transvaal in pursuance of a settled national policy to control all gold mines wherever possible, either by purchase or seizure, in order that Great Britain may command the world's industries. The letter in closing appeals to "heroic and generous America" to intervene in behalf of the Boers, and says:

"Since England will not permit friendly intervention, invite her to a congress of the nations and see whether such a congress, called in the interest of peace, will be ignored. England would not dare to refuse to attend such a congress if called by the United States and participated in by four or five of the great powers.

"The maxims of your republic—'equality,' 'justice,' 'liberty' — have been the chief means of building the great republic, and its highest purpose should be the preservation of other lands whose people aspire to similar blessings. We shall continue to hope that you and other members of your congress, whose hearts have been touched by the noble sacrifices and brave deeds of the people of our republics, may prevail upon your great country to undertake the termination of the war in South Africa."

Girls Sold Into Slavery.

Chicago, Feb. 19.—Girls are sold into slavery in Chicago for $5 each and royalty of from $10 to $15 a week, according to Jennie Neumann, 17 years old. She claims to have been a victim of this traffic. Her story was told to Justice Bradwell, who issued warrants for Hyman Rheinberg. Jennie declares Rheinberg sold her to May Baker, 40 Franklin street, and the latter has been placed under bonds for appearance in court. According to the recital of Jennie, who looks to be not more than 15 years old, Rheinberg ingratiates himself with young women and escorts them on various misleading pretexts to resorts such as the place conducted by May Baker. There, it is charged, he sells his dupes for $5 each and such royalty as he can collect during their retention in the establishment.

Charles L. Tiffany Is Dead.

New York, Feb. 19.—Charles L. Tiffany, senior member of the jewelry firm of Tiffany & Co., died Tuesday at his home in this city of pneumonia. He was 90 years old. He had been ill only a few days, but had been kept to his home for some time as a consequence of a fall on Oct. 6, when he seriously injured his hip. Mr. Tiffany was born at Killingly, Conn. He came to this city when 25 years of age, and, with J. L. Young, established a bric-a-brac store at Broadway and Chambers street. The business grew rapidly, particularly in the importation of jewelry and art works from Europe. In addition to importation, the firm soon took up manufacturing in this country and laid the foundation for the great business now conducted under the firm name of Tiffany & Co.

Gave Away the Pen.

Washington, Feb. [illegible].—President Roosevelt has presented to Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts the pen with which he on Saturday signed the Gillet-Lodge bill, to forbid the sale of intoxicants, opium and firearms by American citizens in islands of the Pacific not under any civilized power, of which the New Hebrides is the chief group. In order to make this protection permanent and extend it to all aboriginal races, Secretary Hay has asked the British government to join us in submitting to other commercial powers a universal treaty to prohibit the selling of intoxicants and opium to such races everywhere.

Contract System Killed.

Washington, Feb. 19.—The project to farm out rural free delivery service to contractors seems doomed to defeat. The project could not be considered as an amendment to the post-office appropriation bill, except by the committee on rules reporting a new rule to the house. In the absence of such rule the contract scheme could be stricken out on a point of order. It is stated that the speaker, after canvassing the house on the proposition, decided that such a rule should not be reported. The postoffice committee is no longer trying to force the contract system.

Miner's Sudden Death.

Calumet, Mich., Feb. 19.—John Vabara, employed at the Asceola mine, was caught Tuesday between the timbers of the rock house and a moving car and was instantly killed.

If the people only attended to the regular movement of their bowels as closely as they do to their business and social affairs, half the ills of life would be avoided. ANDREWS' PRIVATE ACCOUNT.

Overdrafts Touched $100,000 Mark as Early as Last July.

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 19.—Revelations of the methods of Frank C. Andrews in juggling with the credit and the manipulation of his account at the City Savings bank have just been made, which throw new light upon the bluff he maintained. A glimpse of his bank account offers the startling fact that long before the slump in Amalgamated, as far back as Jan. 2, 1901, the fallen financier had figures like $100,000 against his name in excess of his deposits.

The relation of this remarkable bank account with the course of Amalgamated can be followed without difficulty. Beginning with the month of October of last year, in which the pursuit of the Amalgamated was extremely dizzy, it is found that Andrews became the bank's debtor to the amount of $199,800.98. This was due on Oct. 21. A few days previous the state bank examiner looked over the books and found them ostensibly correct. Amalgamated was breaking, but Andrews held off until the departure of his government visitor.

The incessant drain upon Andrews's financial resources in carrying through this course a big load of Amalgamated copper stock, which had fallen 60 per cent in six months, forced him to a merry clip of credit shuffling. The City Savings bank bore the brunt, according to accounts, though for a number of weeks in the summer he was square with his institution. It was after this that copper broke.

HORTON AND OSBORN.

Talk to Farmers' Association, in Session at Owosso.

Owosso, Mich., Feb. 19.—The seventh annual meeting of the County Association of Farmers' clubs opened at the First Congregational church here yesterday. Mayor Seavery D. Emery led off with a cordial speech of welcome. Speeches were delivered by many county officials and prominent farmers of the community.

Chase S. Osborn, state railroad commissioner, came out strongly for government ownership of railroads at last night's session. He discussed "Grade separation" and told of 1,000 deaths in Michigan last year from railroad accidents, many of which would not have happened with separate grades.

George B. Horton, master of the State Grange, also spoke. He advised the farmers to live up to the golden rule, not to use swear words and not to smoke the old black pipe. He asked them to fight for equal taxation and for pure food laws. Mr. Horton is against the township system of education and believes in the little district red school house, the people's college.

Awarded a Fellowship.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Feb. 19.—Each year the University of Michigan awards a fellowship in sociology, and the student winning it is sent to Chicago to work in the Chicago Commons Social Settlement, and full credit is given the fellowship holder in the university for all the time spent at the Commons. This year's award has just been made to Miss Gertrude E. Palmer, a member of the junior literary class. Miss Palmer will leave the latter part of this week and will make a special study in selecting parks and playgrounds in the crowded districts of the city.

A Cocaine Fiend.

Flint, Mich., Feb. 19.—At 9 o'clock Tuesday morning Dr. F. A. Cady, who was arrested for printing obscene photographs last week, waived examination, and at 10 o'clock was before the circuit judge. The prosecutor stated that the man was a cocaine fiend and recommended that he be let off with a fine. He was sentenced to $100 fine or four months in jail. He will probably be sent to a gold cure institute by friends.

Washington, Feb. 19.—Mrs. W. I. Kilpatrick of Owosso, and baby, in the Washington pest house with smallpox, are reported today to have passed danger point. The baby, in fact, is nearly well. Mrs. Kilpatrick has not since she was stricken been so sick but what she was permitted to continue to nurse the baby at her breast.

Waggoner, South Branch, $8; Minerva Rose Grant, Grand Rapids, $12. Renewal (widows)—Deann Hutt, Dimondale, $12; Martha B. Green, Coldwater, $12; Lucy A. Knight, Dansville, $12.

Outside Parties In It.

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 20.—It has been strongly intimated by one of the directors of the wrecked City Savings bank that outside parties connived with Frank C. Andrews in his operations, and the same director has stated, to use his own words, that he would "leave nothing undone to this end, that Andrews's associates, to protect whom he robbed us, and with whose knowledge he was trading on false credits, will be brought to book."

Favor Omnibus Claims Bill.

Washington, Feb. 19.—The senate committee on claims Tuesday authorized a favorable report on the omnibus claims bill, and later in the day Senator Warren reported the bill to the senate. As reported, the bill provides for the payment of about 400 claims and makes an aggregate appropriation of $3,051,842. Many other claims are referred to the executive departments for findings. No claim which has not been passed by either the senate or house is included in the bill.

DESERTED POGRAM'S

[Original.]

"I wonder what's the matter at Pogram's," said Dave Hingham to his wife one morning as he stood in front of the house looking down over the corn to the rear of Pogram's farm. "Thar hain't no life about the place nohow, an' thar hain't been none since Thursday."

"You jist mind your own business, Dave Hingham, an' let other people's alone. You know the trouble you got into by investigating the Partridge affair. Like enough Pogram's gone a-shootin' or somethin'."

"But thar's such a deathly look about it. Pogram never leaves his place 'cept at reg'lar times. He lives thar all alone an' is jist in a condition fur a first class murder. Now I think of it, night afore last I heared a shot in that direction right in the middle of the night, an' somehow I felt as ef a ghost had passed."

"Well, why don't you go down an' see about it?"

"Reckon I hain't got no time."

The truth was that Hingham was a superstitious man, with a horror at coming upon anything ghostly. He could have gone down to Pogram's as well as not for all the work he did on his farm, for he was as lazy as he was superstitious. Instead of going to work, he went over to talk to Steve Blackburn, who owned the next farm, and endeavor to interest him in the matter. Steve was picking berries, but paused in his work and heard Hingham through, then said deliberately:

"Reckon I hain't got no less to do than you." Then he turned to his berry picking. He was well aware of Dave's laziness.

Dave went the round of the farms that morning, spreading the news of a tragedy at Pogram's. The farmers could all look down on the deserted place, for Pogram's was in the valley—an open space through which the road ran—and knots of them gathered on the hills and speculated as to what was the matter. The Pogram farm had indeed an uncanny look about it. The gate was open, as well as the back window; also the door of the stable where Pogram kept his horse and buggy. The overlookers compared notes as to when they had last seen Pogram, and Deacon Huston's date was the latest, three days before, when he had met Pogram walking along the road very much dejected. After the deacon's testimony the theory was changed from murder to suicide.

Still no one had yet been found with sufficient nerve to go down and face the corpse. The white curtain in the rear window continued to flap, as much as to say, "Why don't you come?" But the better the groups looking down on Pogram's understood the invitation the more disinclined were they to accept it. Finally it was agreed that some one should go, and the choice fell upon Dave Hingham.

"Oh, I don't take no interest in the matter," said Dave, blanching. "I'm goin' to work."

But Dave had called attention to the tragedy and dwelt upon it and stirred it up till his neighbors began to hold him responsible. Ike Merton and Tom Markley boldly told Dave that, since he had first noticed the stillness about Pogram's, he was the person to investigate the cause. Dave tried to crawl out of it, but the two men insisted, agreeing to back him up.

"Serves you right, Dave," said his wife, who understood his natural disinclination at facing unpleasant scenes. "Ef you hadn't said nothin' about it, you'd 'a' been let alone."

The three men started down the hill, Dave in advance. He wanted the rear, but Ike Merton had concluded to take his revolver, to be ready in case of an emergency, and playfully pointed it at the chosen leader, infusing into him the necessary stimulus. The investigators proceeded, climbing the fences on their route, watched by the group of people on the hill. When they came to the rear of Pogram's farm, they halted a moment for observation. The willow tree hung mournfully over the woodhouse; the tin cup rested immovable on the pump; the curtain flapped from the rear window.

"Reckon you'd better go ahead with the shootin' iron, Ike," said Dave. "Thar mought be some of the murderers thar yit."

"You take it," said Ike, handing him the revolver. "I hain't no shot nohow."

Dave staggered on, pausing at the stable door. Pogram's horse and buggy, the only occupants, were gone.

"They've cleaned out the stock, shore enough," said Tom Markley.

"See the tracks of the buggy," said Ike.

"Go on, Dave," said both, seeing that their leader was inclined to turn back.

Thus urged, Dave staggered to the house, and, after several ineffectual efforts to gather sufficient courage to approach the open window, he at last did so and, white as a sheet, looked in, his two companions peering over his shoulders.

"Whoop!"

There were shouts from up the road, and the investigators, turning, saw Pogram's buggy, followed by several teams, coming at full speed. Pogram, who was dressed in his best Sunday suit, drove his own vehicle, beside him a young woman in a white muslin dress, with a veil and orange blossoms on her head, while behind was a bridal party of the friends of both.

"You, Dave Hingham, git away from my winder!" cried Pogram as he turned into the yard.

The mystery was solved. Pogram had been courting and the day the deacon saw him had been refused, but the girl had suddenly changed her mind, and Pogram had gone to be married.

BASIL VENN INSLEE.

Timid Applause.

During the earlier days of the reign of Queen Victoria dramatic performances were given at Windsor castle under the management of Charles Kean. The audiences being limited and stiffly aristocratic, the applause was naturally not especially hearty, and the comedians felt the absence of the more demonstrative approval manifested in the regular theater.

One evening the queen sent an equerry to Mr. Kean to know if the actors would like anything (meaning refreshments), when the actor replied, "Say to her majesty that we should be grateful for a little applause when the spectators are pleased."

Back went the equerry and conveyed the message. At the end of the act there was a slight suggestion of handclapping and exceedingly gentle foot tapping. James Wallack, who knew nothing of the message sent to the queen, hearing the mild demonstration, pricked up his ears and inquired, "What is that?"

Mr. Kean replied, "That, my dear Wallack, is applause."

"God bless me!" retorted Wallack. "I thought it was some one shelling peas."

The Witch of the Charles River

[Original.]

The winter of 1692 was a cold one for New England. In a hut on the river Charles one evening a woman sat opposite her son at table. Percival Yorke, a young man of twenty, lithe and strong, dropped the spoon with which he had eaten his porridge and, taking a pair of skates from a closet, began to buckle them on his feet.

"You are going to see the witch, I suppose," said his mother

"Ann is not a witch," he replied.

"H'm!" said his mother, beginning to clear the table. "She has at least bewitched you."

The young man made no reply. He was troubled. He knew the reports current about the girl who had fascinated him and was affected by them. Nevertheless he went on putting his skates to his feet.

"Ann Hollister will wreck your soul," pursued the mother, setting her jaws firmly.

"Why do you think so, mother?"

"No such thing as a Bible is to be found in her house."

Percival arose and went to the door. As he stood looking out on to the moonlit ice that covered the river he shuddered. Something told him that his mother was right—he had better keep away from Ann Hollister.

"And you will go, my boy?"

"I must. I promised to go tonight."

Percival went out to the margin of the river, a few rods distant, and once on the ice glided away. It was a six mile skate to Ann's home, but the ice was so smooth and his limbs so long and sinewy that he covered the distance in a short time. Reaching the place, a hut no larger than his own, Percival knocked at the door and was admitted. Ann lived with her grandfather and grandmother, who sat one on each side of the great fireplace warming their hands. Ann led her lover into the kitchen. Hers was a little, wiry figure, with a white face and a profusion of black hair.

"Ann," said Percival, "I was thinking while coming in what chapter of the sacred book is to be found the parable of the sower."

"I don't know, Percival."

"Get the Bible and let us find out."

"The Bible is loaned, Percival. Come and sit by me." And, taking her lover's hand, she attempted to draw him down beside her on an oaken bench.

"Not so, Ann. I would not sit in a house where there is no Bible."

He turned from her and strode to the door. Ann followed him, trying to dissuade him from his course. Percival was firm, but before leaving he turned and gave Ann his hand. In a moment he was drawn down and his lips were glued to hers. It was as if a sudden warm blast had arisen to sweep away his faculties.

"Let me go!" he cried. "I will come again when the Bible is returned."

At the mention of the sacred book his will came back to him, and, turning away, he staggered to the ice and fled.

Although it was six miles to his home, following the route over which the ice was smooth, it was but four if he chose at times to cross the current where there were gaps. He started undetermined which route to take, but presently, hearing the sound of skates cutting the smooth surface, he looked back, and there behind him came the witch. With fresh vigor he turned his face in a straight line with his home. Now and again he would turn to cast a terrified glance over his shoulder and see the sprite figure of Ann Hollister coming after him. He kept a close watch ahead for breaks in the ice and soon came to one. It was but two yards wide and easily jumped. After he was over it he turned and watched to see Ann pass it. When she reached it, she did not seem to change her strokes in the least, sailing across like the witch she was. Then Percival came to a second rift, larger than the first. This he jumped, and his pursuer also passed over it, though when she reached the farther side Percival thought she slipped and staggered. But at that moment he happened to have the Bible in his mind, and to this he attributed her discomfiture. At last they came to the main rift in their way, but a few hundred yards from Percival's home. The great yawning gulf sent terror to his heart; but, fixing his mind on the holy book, he put on all speed and went safely over. Ann was now close behind. Presently he heard a shriek and a splash and "Help me, Percival!"

That cry from the girl who had bewitched him sounded strangely human. Turning, he skated back, and there, clinging to the thin edge of the ice nearest him, was Ann, struggling to reach a place that would not break under her pressure. Percival went to her, held out his hand and rescued her, keeping his mind on the Bible to prevent his also breaking the ice. Then the two skated for his home.

When Mistress Yorke saw the witch coming in dripping, she held up her hands. Nevertheless Ann was provided with dry clothes, and when she had drunk something hot and was seated before a blazing fire she said:

"Percival, go to my dress and bring me what you find in the pocket."

Percival did as he was bid and brought a small volume. Turning over the leaves till she came to the place she wished to find, Ann read:

"Judge not that ye be not judged."

Percival and Ann were afterward married, though not until he had promised her to join Roger Williams at Providence Plantations, where more liberal religious views prevailed.

Didn't Teach Him That Trick.

"That's a werry knowing animal o' yours," said a cockney gentleman to the keeper of an elephant.

"Very," was the cool rejoinder.

"He performs strange tricks and hantics, does he?" inquired the cockney, eying the animal through his glass.

"Surprisin!" retorted the keeper. "We've learned him to put money in that box you see up there. Try him with half a crown."

The cockney handed the elephant half a crown, and, sure enough, he took it in his trunk and placed it in a box high up out of reach.

"Well, that is very hextraordinary—hastonishing, truly!" said the green one, opening his eyes. "Now let's see him take it out and 'and it back."

"We never learned him that trick," retorted the keeper and then turned away to stir up the monkeys and punch the hyenas.—London Tit-Bits.

MARRIAGE ON COMPULSION

[Original.]

Nancy Pollard of Oklahoma was as ready with the pistol as any cowboy in the west. She was a fine, spirited girl and had hosts of friends and admirers, especially among the young men, most of whom were in love with her and all of whom would have gone anywhere under her leadership. Allen Truman, who owned a ranch, saw her at a ball, fell in love with her and, being an impulsive man, offered himself to her before the evening's revelry was finished. The next morning, or, rather the next afternoon, he awoke with a headache from the wine he had drunk and with a very uncomfortable remembrance that he had acted hastily. He brooded over the matter for a week then wrote the girl a manly letter, telling her that he had made the pledge under the influence of her attractions which it would not be wise for either to make good.

Nancy had been caught by the handsome ranchman. She was shocked to receive Truman's note, but was too proud to show her feelings. She disdained to make any reply. Later she heard that a party of Truman's friends from the east were spending the summer with him and then that he had become engaged to one of them.

One night in September after the departure of his friends, including his fiancee, Truman heard horses' hoofs without and, going to his window, saw a number of cowboys surrounding his house. At the same time there was a loud knock. Going into the hall, he opened the door, and who should enter but Nancy Pollard! She then and there informed him that he should either marry her or her friends would run him off and make way with him. Truman declined at first, but when Nancy called her supporters he saw by their looks that they would do even more than their idol might have wished. He yielded. A parson who had been brought with the party was called, and the marriage took place. The bride, after assuring the groom that she had no further claim upon him, rode away at the head of her cowboys.

When Truman came to explain the matter to his fiancee, she decided to break with him. He at once went abroad. Being a sensitive man, he could not shake off the melancholy of his situation. He soon forgot the girl who was to have been his wife, but Nancy Pollard he could not forget. There was something in her lawless ways, her dash, her pluck, that kept her continually in his mind. If she had claimed him or the support she was entitled to by law as his wife, he would have hated her. As it was, he felt that gnawing at the heart a man may feel at being scorned by a woman.

One morning he received a letter bearing an Oklahoma postmark and the name of a legal firm printed in the corner. Opening it, he read that Mrs. Truman desired the firm to write him that she regretted her past action with regard to him and if he desired a divorce she would oppose no obstacle in the way of obtaining it.

Truman at once surmised that his wife desired a divorce in order to marry again. The pain the suspicion brought startled him. Then it occurred to him to turn the tables on her. He returned to America and to his ranch, where he learned that she was receiving attention from a young lawyer, one of the firm who had written him at her request. On the afternoon of his arrival he sent a note to her, saying that if she would visit him that evening at his ranch he thought the matter of their separation might be adjusted. Then he paced the veranda till the hour appointed, when Nancy came galloping down the road. When she had dismounted, he led her into the hall where she had forced him to marry her, then turned and said:

"You wish this divorce in order to marry William Pierce of the law firm of Pierce & Ward. Why did you put the matter as you did?"

"Mr. Pierce wrote you. I don't know what he said."

"He said that if I wanted a divorce you would not oppose it. When you wanted to marry me, you compelled me. Now"—

"I have always regretted doing so," she interrupted.

"Now you wish to be free to marry some one else. I not only propose that you shall not do so, but"—he drew a revolver—"if you will not agree to live in this house with me, to endure the sight of me every day, I will kill you."

"Is this for revenge?"

"No."

"Then give me your reason."

"Because I love you."

Nancy began to sway. Truman caught her, and she fell into his arms.

"Nancy, give up this marriage. Be my wife in fact as well as in law."

"I have no idea of marriage," she said.

"Then what does this mean?"

"Mr. Pierce has been trying to persuade me to marry him and has acted on his own responsibility."

"And you love me notwithstanding my treatment of you?"

"Yes. But how can you ever love a woman who has put such an indignity upon you?"

"Let us forget all that. It was my fault that led to yours. Here is a home already prepared for us, and we have only to take possession of it. You are my wife. Do not leave me."

Nancy insisted on being married again, contending that the first marriage, being by compulsion, was no marriage at all. There was a grand wedding, which was attended by the cowboys who had officiated at the first ceremony, and they all grasped the groom by the hand heartily and insisted on kissing the bride.

The karroo bush provides against drought by roots of enormous length, stretching under ground to a depth of many feet. At the end of a ten months' drought, when the earth is baked brickdust for two feet from the surface, if you break the dried stalk of a karroo bush three inches high you will find running down the center a tiny thread of pale, green tinted tissue still alive with sap.—Fortnightly Review.

Mrs. Crawford—So you haven't found the course of lectures on cooking you attended to be of much practical use?

Mrs. Crabshaw—No, my dear. They either told you how to prepare terrapin and canvasback or else how to live on 15 cents a day.—Life.

Japan is the largest consumer of rice in the world, the average being 300 pounds a person a year. The Americans use but four pounds per capita.

It has been estimated that from 90,000 to 100,000 deer feed in the forests of Scotland and that 4,000 stags are killed annually.

Barnum's Monkeys

"All well—all happy—lots of fun". That is the regular report from the monkey cage of Barnum's Circus ever since the keepers began dosing the monkeys with Scott's Emulsion. Consumption was carrying off two thirds of them every year and the circus had to buy new ones.

One day a keeper accidentally broke a bottle of Scott's Emulsion near the monkey cage and the monkeys eagerly lapped it up from the floor. This suggested the idea that it might do them good. Since then the monkeys have received regular doses and the keepers report very few deaths from consumption. Of course it's cheaper to buy Scott's Emulsion than new monkeys—and that suits the circus men.

Consumption in monkeys and in man is the same disease. If you have it or are threatened with it can you take the hint?

This picture represents the Trade Mark of Scott's Emulsion and is on the wrapper of every bottle.

THE CHERRY TREE

Two little Stories about our old Friend,

GEORGE WASHINGTON

And the Cherry tree told by two Young Gentlemen of Tecumseh

The two boys in Miss Richardson's room in the West Branch school wrote the following articles and we think them well worthy of publication.

WASHINGTON'S BOYHOOD DAYS.

Once there was a little boy born at Bridges Creek, Va. His name was George Washington. When George was three years old their house burned down. Then his father moved to Fredericksburg. Then George started to go to school. It was a very queer school. His teacher's name was Hobby. He dug graves too. The school was in a field which was a tobacco field. The man did not teach George writing or reading.

George was very fond of out door sports. He could run very fast and he could throw very far. Once he throw a piece of slate across the Rappahannock River. The place was marked where he threw the slate. George always liked to play soldier and he was nearly always the leader of one side. George's father died when he was eleven years old. George had a brother named Lawrence who lived in Mt. Vernon, Va.

After George's father died he went back and helped a school teacher. His name was Williamson. In Mt. Vernon, Va., George had a very true friend. His name was George too. They went hunting together many times on the mountains. They were called the two Georges. The other George had ten thousand acres of land. George Washington was very true and brave.

Once George's father had a very nice cherry tree. And George's father made him a very nice present of a hatchet. George was very much pleased with it.

He was all the time going around chopping logs and fences and about everything he could lay his hatchet on. One day he went out into the garden and he saw the cherry tree and he thought that he would like to chop the tree. So he went to work chopping away until at last it fell. George forgot that it was his father's cherry tree, he even forgot that it was a cherry tree.

When his father came home and saw the cherry tree chopped down he was very displeased. He asked the hired men if they knew anything about it and they said no Pretty soon he asked George if he knew anything about it and he said yes I did it father. George never told a lie. George's father said he would rather have him chop a cherry tree than to tell a lie.

George's mother once had a very nice pony that she rode on. And she was very fond of it. Once George took the pony and rode across the field. It was going very fast. Pretty soon they got near a fence and George could not stop the pony. The pony ran into the fence and it killed it. He went home and told his mother all about it. She was real sorry but she would rather have the pony killed than to have George tell a lie.

George Washington went to war and freed our country from England. And was made the president of our country. He was so strong that he could lift a tent and its poles that would take two ordinary men to lift. He died a noble man, and a celebrated man to. He never told a lie.

GEORGE WASHINGTON AND HIS HATCHET.

We are all so tired of the story of George and the hatchet that I am going to put it the hatchet and George. The hatchet said to George one day "Come, we have to cut down a cherry tree" but George said "No! no!" But the hatchet said; come on, George felt very sorry. But the hatchet pointed to the cherry tree and said "Come on."

"Oh what a face the cherry tree had when it saw them." Then the hatchet took poor George by the legs and began to cut down the tree little George began to cry as loud as he could. When George's father came home he said "Who has cut down my tree?" And the hatchet said "I cannot tell a lie, I did it with George." With little George? "Yes" said the hatchet. I cut down the cherry tree to see how sharp George was.

FLORIDA CROPS

Growing Celery and Lettuce under Cloth,

THE NEW TOBACCO CULTURE

Interesting Letter from our Neighbor and Townsman, Abner Wilson.

Glenwood, Fla., Feb. 18, 1902.

EDITOR HERALD:

In reply to numerous inquiries from our friends in Tecumseh, I thought it might be of interest to know what "we all" are doing in this far southern country. A year ago I came here, and after investigating the celery business at Sanford and other places, formed a company and bought 280 acres of suitable land at this place and commenced operations. Our company consists of S. B. Mann, H. A. Wright, F. W. Bredow, H. J. Sproul and the Bond Lumber Co., of this place, and Andrew Wilson, Wm. DeMott and the writer, of Tecumseh.

We have cleared 12 acres and put down one well which flows 800 barrels per day. We have our land mostly planted to potatoes this season as it is too new for celery and lettuce until the acidity has a chance to get out of the soil which takes about a year. I am growing a half million celery, cabbage and onion plants for shipping North. We are about to put down a second well and will put in a system of tiles for both drainage and irrigation.

Lettuce grows here to profection all winter, and especially so where covered with thin cloth, giving it a partial shade and protection. Such lettuce is sold as "Frame Head Lettuce" and brings from one to two dollars more per crate than the out door grown. The cost of framing an acre is about $225.00 and as 350 to 400 cases are raised per acre and two crops can be grown it pays to protect it. It also makes it safer from frosts and hot suns.

Our land was one in the wild state when bought but we are right along side the railroad with a station at each corner. We have sold off enough land to pay the original purchase and have over 200 acres left, 100 acres of which is "celery and lettuce land." If "He who causes two blades of grass to grow where one grew before, is a benefactor of his race," what shall be said of those who take a barren piece of Florida Flatwoods land and grow celery and lettuce equal to the finest hot-house product of Long Island. The land has no original fertility whatever. For the garden crops we simply make the fertility, and climate does the rest. After all, as an old German gardner said, the soil is only a place to "hold my vegetable whilst I feed him."

Speaking of growing crops under cloth, why would it not be a good idea for some of our enthuiastic Tobacco men to from a company and grow tobacco under cloth, the same as they are doing in Massachusetts and Connecticut. There is a firm in Southampton, Mass., just formed to manufacture a suitable cloth at reasonable prices. This cloth comes in strips 16½ feet wide, and with care can be used several years. I am informed that Sumatra Tobacco grows to perfection under this cover, the plants growing six to eight feet high, and the leaves very broad, and as fine as tissue paper. Fifteen hundred to two thousand pounds per acre can be grown with the right kind of care, which is worth 40 to 50c. per pound wholesale.

There is several acres south and east of Tecumseh on the river flat suitable for growing tobacco and pretty well protected from the winds which could be safely shedded. If any one interested and will write me in time I will try and raise some plants for this year's setting. Hoping to see all my friends early in April, I am

Sincerely Yours
ABNER WILSON.

DEFENSE HAD NO WITNESSES.

Taylor's Case Will Probably Reach the Jury on Saturday.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 20.—Contrary to the general expectation of the case of Henry Taylor, the eastern capitalist, charged with conspiracy to bribe in connection with the water deal scandal, will be finished this week. The prosecution rested its case Wednesday afternoon after recalling Witnesses Garman and MacLeod. Then, to the surprise of everyone, the defense rested without swearing a single witness. The defense made a formal demand for the reappearance of Mrs. Garman, who had been excused from further attendance as a witness by the court.

Motions to strike out the testimony of Alderman Renihan and Mrs. Garman were overruled. Seven hours on a side were agreed to for the arguments, which will give the case to the jury probably Saturday evening. MacLeod told yesterday about the alleged manufactured trust agreement and the receipt for the $75,000, which he stated were prepared in Salsbury's office on the morning the grand jury convened.

KEPT IT SECRET.

Young Blissfield Couple Had Been Long Time Married.

Blissfield, Mich., Feb. 20.—Blissfield society people have received a sudden shock of surprise in the authoritative announcement by the contracting parties themselves, of the marriage last September of Miss Ella Hazzard, daughter of John Hazzard, and one of the most popular young ladies of the town, to Leslie Harsh of Adrian, formerly of Blissfield.

The young couple visited the Adrian fair together last fall, and while in that city the ceremony was performed When they returned Miss Hazzard went to her home, and Harsh to his boarding house, nothing being said about the wedding, which, it is understood, had been opposed by Mr. and Mrs. Hazzard.

Until yesterday the young couple kept their secret, but when the time came for the annual trip of the bride's family to California she herself was loath to go, and the fact of her having a husband leaked out.

Caught Fish With a Saw.

Owosso, Mich., Feb. 20.—William Onion, who lives six miles south of Bancroft, was cutting ice on Wood's lake, near his home, recently, when he noticed that the fish began coming up to the surface near him for air. The lake had been completely frozen over, and the fish were dazed and sluggish. Onion began striking at them with the saw and stunned several. That method proved too slow, so he tried hooking them on the saw teeth. In half an hour he had several bushels of bass and pickerel, but his fishing came to an untimely end when a 14-pound pickerel wriggled on the saw and pulled him in. He hastened home for dry clothing and returned with a wagon, but the fish had acquired wisdom and stayed away. The seven bushels were distributed among neighbors.

What We Most Remember.

Memory is for the most part "a trivial fond record" of the affairs of everyday life, and our intense desire not to lose the remembrance of these unimportant everyday matters is one of the greatest testimonies to the predominance of happiness over unhappiness in the world. Do we not feel sorry from our hearts for any one who has lost such an infinitely precious possession without even wondering whether or no there was anything in their past lives worth recollecting? After all, how few are the hours which any of us would blot out of our lives! Those perhaps during which we have witnessed or suffered acute physical or mental pain, the moment when we engendered the worm of remorse which dieth not or those few minutes of humiliation which, whether we trace them to fault or fate, remain in our minds to "vex us like a thing that is raw." But how small is the part we would have taken away compared to the part we would retain!—London Spectator.

An Execution In China.

The poor wretches were made to dig a large square pit, and one by one they were made kneel at the edge with their hands tied behind their backs. A Japanese officer stepped forward and with the ordinary service sword drew it back and forward over the poor wretch's neck, and then with a swift blow it descended, cutting off the head.

The next one was as successful, and then came a terrible spectacle. The Japanese officer, after wiping his sword, drew the back to and fro over the poor wretch's neck three or four times before he struck the fatal blow. Down came the blade on the apex of the skull, cutting about two inches into the neck.

The poor wretch fell into the pit, the Japanese officer climbing down and sawing away at the neck until the head was severed. The heads were immediately carried over to the main road and strung up on poles as an object lesson to the large number of Chinese who were congregated around with blanched faces.—Canadian Magazine.

We Grow Old in Pieces.

The general impression is that the body grows old uniformly. From birth till the age of twenty-five it grows in size and weight, from twenty-five to fifty it remains stationary, and from that period it decays. Observations of expert physiologists show us that this impression is not a correct one.

Each organ begins to age independently, each has its period for the change, and these periods differ with the various organs and do not take place coincidently, as we may have supposed. The body attains its greatest size during the third decade and remains in about the same condition during the fourth and fifth decades, that is true, but the brain reaches its greatest size in the second decade, the kidneys reach their maximum size during the third decade, the muscles, skeleton and intestines during the fifth, the heart and lungs in the eighth decade.

Increase or decrease in the size or weight of the body consequently is not due to simultaneous increase or decrease in all its parts.

The Springbok.

A peculiarity of that most beautiful of South African antelopes the springbok is that it always leaps over human tracks. It is at once exceedingly shy and marvelously active, and the reason for this strange antic is its intense surpicion of any possible enemies, among whom it has come to recognize man as the most dangerous.

It is not only with human tracks that the springbok goes through this performance, for it does the same with the tracks of lions or even when it gets wind of a lion. The leap is exceedingly graceful, and the animal covers from twelve to fifteen feet at each bound. It drops on all four feet at once and immediately rises again, making a clear spring without any run.

Its usual gait when not pursued is a light springy trot. The springbok usually travels with its nose to the ground, as if constantly on the lookout for the scent of enemies.

Pueblos and the Compass.

Among the Pueblo Indians six points of the compass are recognized, and each has its color. North is yellow, west is blue, south is red, east is white, the upper regions are many colored and the lower regions are black. All the prey gods are represented by their images in these six divisions.

For example, there is the yellow mountain lion of the north, the blue mountain lion of the west, the red mountain of the south, and so on. Likewise it is with the other beasts, and thus a very considerable number of deities is formed. All of them must receive worshipful attention lest they get angry and revenge themselves for the neglect.

A Japanese Superstition.

Writing exhaustively of dragon flies Lafcadio Hearn says in his book, "A Japanese Miscellany," of "the dragon fly of the dead:"

"Unlike the equally weird name "yurei-tombo, or 'ghost dragon fly,' the term shroai-tombo does not refer to the appearance of the insect, but to the strange belief that certain dragon flies are ridden by the dead, used as winged steeds.

"From the morning of the thirteenth to the midnight of the fifteenth day of the old seventh month—the time of the festival of the Bon—the dragon flies are said to carry the hotoke-sama, the august spirits of the ancestors, who then revisit their former homes. Therefore, during the Buddhist All Souls' children are forbidden to molest any dragon flies, especially dragon flies that may happen to enter the family dwelling.

"This supposed relation of dragon flies to the supernatural world helps to explain an old folk saying, still current in some provinces, to the effect that the child who catches dragon flies will never 'obtain knowledge.'"

How Frederick Stopped Dueling.

When Frederick the Great ascended the Prussian throne, fatal duels among officers were of daily occurrence. He resolved to put an end to the practice, and he did—for a time; as long as he reigned, in fact. He issued an edict that any officer fighting a duel and surviving would be shot or hanged.

Two officers appealed to him to be allowed to try to slay each other. Granted on two conditions, that he (the king) should chose the ground and be present at the encounter. Accepted.

Frederick chose the ground, attended the "meet" and took his seat behind the fine new gibbet he had erected in honor of the occasion. The combatants approached his majesty, saw the gibbet, became puzzled and embarrassed.

"What may this mean, your gracious majesty?" they ventured to ask.

"It means this," was the suave reply—"that the man who survives will be hanged as high as Haman on that gibbet."

There was no duel.—Pall Mall Gazette.

People Who Did Not Kill.

The inhabitants of the Canary islands, the Guanches, were, it is supposed, but the mountain shepherds of a submerged world. Though so strong physically, the Guanches were nevertheless a very gentle race. They rarely made war on one another, and when the Europeans fell into their hands they did not kill them, but sent them to tend sheep in the mountains. So tame were the birds in this happy land that when the Spaniards first landed they came and fed out of their hands.

To kill an animal degraded a man. The butcher was a reprieved criminal and outcast and lived apart, he and his assistants being supported by the state. No woman was allowed to approach the shambles, and in such horror was killing held by these giants that no man could be ennobled until he had publicly declared that he had not been guilty of killing any animal, not even a goat. Their standard of morality was high. Robbery was almost unknown among them.

The Shark Is a Slow Swimmer.

One ill service nature has done the shark—namely, that of placing a triangular fin on his back which acts as a danger signal and gives warning of his approach. Happily the shark has not been gifted with sufficient sagacity to be aware of this peculiarity, for had he been so he would unquestionably abandon his habit of swimming close to the surface of the water and would in that case be enabled to approach his victim unobserved. The shark is a slow swimmer for his size and strength.

Byron observes, "As darts the dolphin from the shark." But Byron was a poet and does not appear to have been a close observer of the habits of inhabitants of the water, or he would have known that a shark would have no more chance of catching a dolphin than a sheep would of overhauling a hare. A shark will keep up with a sailing ship, but it is as much as it can do to follow in the wake of a fast steamer, and a torpedo boat would be able to give it points.

Can You Say This? Try It.

How much pleasanter it is to sit in a cab and think how much pleasanter it is to sit in a cab than it is to be walking, than it is to be walking and think how much pleasanter it is to sit in a cab than it is to be walking.

A Thing to Remember.

A donkey who had been carefully raised by his master gained so much knowledge that he could not help considering himself a superior being.

"I am too modest to throw high priced bouquets at myself," he soliloquized, "but the fact remains that I have distanced them all. I can lie down at command and roll over. With the assistance of sundry winks and nods from Ali Hassan, my master, I can pick the different pasteboards from a card pack. There is no other donkey in the world that can shake hands like me. People crowd over one another to see me walk on my hind legs. As for dancing, queens of the ballroom say that I waltz like an angel."

"True, true," said a wise old owl, who was listening to the donkey. "You are a paragon and are not to be blamed for realizing the fact. But you must not forget one thing."

"What is that?" asked the educated donkey.

"That you are only an ass," quietly remarked the owl.

Moral.—When a person thinks he is better than others, he should carefully avoid the looking glass.

An Odd Betrothal.

It is said that a certain servant in a moment of weariness with domestic duties said, "Rather than go on like this month after month forever I'll ask the first man who passes if he wants a wife."

Her fellow servant challenged her to put the question to a man just then passing by. The young woman was not prepared to be taken at her word so suddenly, but, in desperation, bethought herself for a way of escape. She was Welsh and hurriedly exclaimed as the unknown was passing, "A oes cisiau gwraig arnoch chwi?" ("Do you want a wife?")

"Oes" ("Yes") was the unexpected reply from the young man, who also hailed from the principality, and, with Celtic sprightliness, followed into the hall the blushing girl, who had fled upon hearing the familiar word. The maid, a farmer's daughter, was buxom and neat, the swain was an industrious and ambitious young dealer with promising prospects, and soon "merrily rang the wedding bells."

Industrious Old Clock.

At quaint old Castletown, the "metropolis" of the Isle of Man, there exists a very interesting clock, which has now performed its functions of time telling in five centuries. It was presented by Queen Elizabeth in the year 1597 to Castle Rushen, the fortress which stands in the middle of Castletown, from which the town takes its name. The works are crude, being driven by ropes and pulleys, but nevertheless they keep fair time. The clock, in fact, has run ever since it was built, except for rare stoppages for repairs. To this day the single hand which travels slowly round the dial outside the tower of Castle Rushen is the principal source of information as to the hour to the inhabitants of Castletown. A timepiece which has worked continuously for more than 300 years is something of a real curiosity.—Jewelers' Circular.

The Water In Utah's Great Lake.

Salt lake is by no means a saturated solution of salt, yet it is five or six times as rich in salts as the ocean and nearly as strong as the Dead sea. In summer it contains between 20 and 22 per cent of salt, the saturation point not being reached until the salt forms a little over a third of the liquid. There are all through the great basin numerous saline lakes and ponds, but none of the size and importance of this in Utah. Not infrequently they are shallow and entirely disappear during the dryness and heat of summer, leaving to mark their sites only a stretch of some acres—or it may be miles—of clay or mud, entirely covered with salt.

A Singing Well.

A singing well is one of the natural curiosities of Texas. In fine weather a sound like that of an æolian harp is given out by the well. At times the sound is clear; then it recedes, as if far away, and then it reaches the ear very faintly. These changes take place every few minutes and with great regularity. With an east wind blowing the water in the well gets very low, and the mysterious musical sound is faint. A strong west wind causes the water to rise and the sound to increase in volume and clearness.

Love Marriages.

"Was it a love marriage, do you think?"

"Certainly. All marriages are love marriages."

"Isn't that rather a sweeping statement?"

"Not at all. There are love of adventure, you know, love of luxury, love of advertising and various other kinds of love. There is no need of going into details when one speaks of a love marriage."

Golden Kitchen Pots.

In the royal kitchen at St. Petersburg not only are the walls and ceilings of black marble covered with valuable ornaments, but many of the kitchen pots and pans, which originally belonged to the Empress Catherine, are of solid gold.

Something Like One.

"Did you notice how she jabbered away when she sat there between those two men?" "Goodness, yes! It made me think of a tongue sandwich.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

It is human nature to desire to be equal to your superiors and superior to your equals.—Chicago News.

My Hair

"I had a very severe sickness that took off all my hair. I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor and it brought all my hair back again."
W. D. Quinn, Marseilles, Ill.

One thing is certain,—Ayer's Hair Vigor makes the hair grow. This is because it is a hair food. It feeds the hair and the hair grows, that's all there is to it. It stops falling of the hair, too, and always restores color to gray hair.

Getting In Society.

Several young men in our smartest set were asked by an inquisitive genius how they managed to get in high society. "I danced my way in," said one, who frequently leads a cotillon. Another said: "I was too ungraceful for that. But I had a serious way with me, and got into the sacred circle by means of the Sunday school. I taught a Bible class, made acquaintance of the best young men, met their mothers, fathers and finally their sisters." A third: "I got in by being a stranger in New York. While on a hunting expedition in the west I was able, through a happy circumstance, to be of assistance to a very prominent leader of New York society. In gratitude, I suppose, he exacted a promise that I would visit him if I ever came east. I came, I called, I conquered. He dined me at his club, then at his home, where I met his family. His daughter is now my wife."—New York Press.

Constantinople Beggars' Feast Day.

One day in the year Constantinople is free from the beggar nuisance—on Nov. 25. This is the festival of St. John the Almsgiver, the patron saint of the mendicant profession. No beggar of the Greek faith is on his or her beat that day. In the forenoon all, or nearly all, Orthodox mendicants attend a special service in the church of St. Constantine, at which an archbishop officiates. It is arranged by their corporation, for they are organized into a guild like any other trade. The church, spacious as it is, is none too large for the numerous con[illegible]on of cadgers, many of [illegible] their holiday garb lo[illegible] are [illegible] respectable citizens. The rest of the day is spent in festivities, which are apt to extend so far into the night that many of the revelers are unable to attend to business on the morrow.

Where He Belonged.

A clergyman observed a horse jockey trying to take in a simple gentleman by imposing upon him a broken winded horse for a sound one. The parson, taking the gentleman aside, told him to be cautious of the person he was dealing with. The gentleman declined the purchase, and the jockey, quite nettled, observed, "Parson, I had much rather hear you preach than to see you privately interfere in bargains between man and man in this way."

"Well," replied the parson, "if you had been where you ought to have been last Sunday you might have heard me preach."

"Where was that?" inquired the jockey.

"In the state prison," returned the clergyman.—London Standard.

She Soon Altered It.

Many young ladies have found it necessary to improve, or rather to alter, the spelling of the names with which they were originally blessed. Mabel becomes Mabelle, Jessie becomes Jessica, Mary becomes Marie, and so forth. A brother lately received a letter from his young sister at a fashionable boarding school. It was signed Jessica. He answered:

> Dear Sister Jessica—Your welcome letter received. Papaica and mammaica are well. Aunt Maryca and Uncle Georgica started for Glasgowica yesterday. I have bought a new horse. You ought to see it. It is a beauty. Its name is Maudica. Your affectionate brother, SAMICA.

The sister's next letter was signed "Jessie."

Some Famous Echoes.

There is a famous echo on the Rhine between Coblentz and Bingen which repeats a word seventeen times, while in the sepulcher of Metella, the wife of Sulla, in the Roman Campagna, there is an echo which repeats five times in different keys and will also give back with distinctness a hexameter line which requires two and a half seconds to utter. Brewster mentions an echo on the north side of Shipley church, in Sussex, England, which repeats twenty-one syllables.

Had Been There.

"There is no doubt," said the student of law, "that many people have been imprisoned, although innocent of any crime."

"I know that by sad experience."

"You don't say so! Let's have the story."

"There's no story to it. I merely had the bad luck to be drawn on several juries that were locked up over night."—Washington Star.

Insult to Injury.

"Poor Bickers has a very hard hearted wife," said Trivvet.

"What's the trouble now?" asked Dicer.

"She not only broke the broomstick over his head, but made him go to the store and buy another."—Detroit Free Press.

Finding His Bride.

In one part of the canton of Ticino, in Switzerland, a very quaint marriage ceremony prevails. The bridegroom dresses in his "Sunday best" and, accompanied by as many friends and relatives as he can muster for the fete, goes to claim his bride.

Finding the door locked, he demands admittance, the inmates ask him his business, and in reply he solicits the hand of his chosen maiden.

If his answer be deemed satisfactory, he is successively introduced to a number of matrons and maids, some perhaps deformed and others old and ugly. Then he is presented to some large dolls, all of which he rejects with scorn, amid general merriment. The bewildered bridegroom, whose impetuosity and temper are now sorely tried, is then informed that his ladylove is absent and invited in to see for himself.

He rushes into the house and searches from room to room until he finds her in her bridal dress, ready to go to church. Then are his troubles over and his state as a Benedict assured.

Does it Pay to Buy Cheap?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the more severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible for you, then in either case take the ONLY remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung trouble, "Boschee's German Syrup." It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest, and cures the patient. Try one bottle. Recommended many years by all druggists in the world. Get Green's Prize Almanac at J. J. Orr's.

WORTH $300,000,000.

The President of a certain big Oil Company is said to be worth $300,000,000. A tidy bit of money and no mistake. And yet he isn't happy. In an address to a Bible class he spoke of trials and troubles of the rich and the loads they have to carry. A young lady whispered to a friend that he might wear a Benson's Porous Plaster on his back or, better still, divide the money among the members of the class. I don't know why her idea about the plaster makes me want to laugh, but it does. All the same I have seen plenty of people laugh after putting Benson's Plasters on their backs or chests, or on any other spot where there was weight, heaviness, weakness or pain. It may be the sharp stabs of neuralgia, the aches and wrenches of rheumatism; it may be colds in muscles or bones; it may be those kidney or lumbago thrusts that make you yell as at a dog bite; or it may be a strain or cramp, anything that wants quieting and comforting. Dont bother with salves, liniments, lotions, etc., or with any of the stupid and useless old-style plasters. Clap on a Benson's. It relieves at once and cures quickly. It stops the pain and makes you laugh for the very ease and good feeling of it. But watch out against imitations and substitutes. All druggists, or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on receipt of 25c. each.

Accident to Engine Ditches Lake Shore Train.

NO PERSONS WERE KILLED

Happened Near Oberlin, O.—Brakeman Received Severe Injuries—Passengers Given a Scare and a Severe Shaking Up.

Cleveland, O., Feb. 22.—Lake Shore accommodation train, leaving this city at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, was wrecked on the outskirts of Oberlin about 4 o'clock. Louis Bates, the head brakeman on the train, is the only person reported seriously hurt. He jumped through a car window and in falling injured his back. At Oberlin he was removed to a hotel and a physician made examination of his injuries. Besides the injuries to his back, Bates is unable to move his legs. John Lace of Norwalk was thrown against a seat and his head cut. Beyond a severe shaking up, it is reported that no others of the passengers was hurt.

A crank pin on the left front driver broke, loosening the connecting rod which swung with the wheel, demolishing the cab on the fireman's side of the cab. It also broke the connecting rod on the other side. This rod tore the air brake cylinder off the engine and rendered it useless. The engine and cars left the rails, the cars being piled upright in the ditch. As soon as the passengers realized that the train was off the track they made a rush for the rear doors of the coaches and all got out safely. The track was quickly cleared, allowing other trains free passage. Had the accident occurred a short distance further west the wrack would have been more disastrous, because of a steep embankment.

FOOLED HER PA.

Corunna Girl Eloped and Married a Scribe.

Owosso, Mich., Feb. 24.—Miss Celia Cudney of Corunna went, as her parents supposed, to visit an aunt in the country. Instead, she went to Three Rivers and married Bert Deyo, a former employe of the Corunna Journal. When her father heard she was not with her aunt he immediately started for Three Rivers, as he suspected the truth. He was too late. The father now declares his daughter will get neither his pardon nor his money. The girl's parents are quite wealthy.

Stabbed Playmate in a Quarrel.

Carleton, Mich., Feb. 24.—Frederick Tutchings, aged, 18 years, and Ernest Fench, aged 15 years, of Willow, got into a quarrel which resulted in a stabbing affray. Fench stabbed Tutchings three times with a jackknife, takink effect once in the back, side and arm. Tutchings is in a critical condition and his recovery is considered doubtful.

Bryan Lectured to Students.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Feb. 24.—William Jennings Bryan paid his fourth visit to Ann Arbor Saturday. He came under the auspices of the law students for the Washington's birthday address, and the greatest crowd of people that ever jammed into University hall was present. The aisles were densely packed with humanity and hundreds were turned away unable even to get standing room.

Think They Have Him Spotted.

Niles, Mich., Feb. 24.—Several young ladies whose characters were attacked by an anonymous letter fiend have been on a still hunt for months, and, it is alleged, a chain of circumstantial evidence points to a clerk in a local store. Sensational developments are looked for.

Eloped and Got Married.

Marshall, Mich., Feb. 24.—Word has been received here that Andrew McKee of this city and Miss Mabel Curtis of Marshall township, who eloped last Thursday, were married upon their arrival at Michigan City, Ind.

Brained Her Husband.

Peoria, Ill., Feb. 24.—Word reached has reached this city to the effect that a dreadful tragedy occurred near Kickapoo, a village 12 miles from this place, early Sunday morning. A woman named Jenkins, becoming suddenly insane, secured an ax and brained her husband while asleep on a bed. She then placed the muzzle of a revolver against her temple and blew her brains out, falling dead. Jenkins lingered a few hours, when he died. The woman had been acting strangely of late and is supposed to have been deranged. Three small children witnessed the tragedy.

A Peculiar Request.

Cincinnati, Feb. 24.—After the remains of Dr. Daniel Schuyler Young were cremated Sunday, it was learned that he had provided for the ashes to be taken to his old boyhood home in Montgomery county, New York, where his wife was buried; one-fourth to be sprinkled on her grave, one-fourth over the path to his old schoolhouse, one-fourth at his old home, and one-fourth shot out of a gun at the old homestead.

Findlay, O., Feb. 24.—Fire, originating from an unknown cause, destroyed the entire plant of the Findlay Table Manufacturing Co., Sunday morning, causing a loss of $97,000, with insurance of $50,000. As a result of the fire 100 men are thrown out of employment. During the progress of the flames, Fireman Stephen Smith fell from a 30-foot ladder and was severely hurt.

Indians Becoming Hostile.

Guthrie, Ok., Feb. 24.—Squads of minute men have been ordered at Wetumka to protect the town from the Crazy Snake Indians. The squads are on guard alternately after night, and runners are sent in all directions from the town on the lookout for the hostile Indians. A ROYAL VISITOR

Prince Henry Reaches New York Sunday.

GREETED WITH CANNON'S BOOM

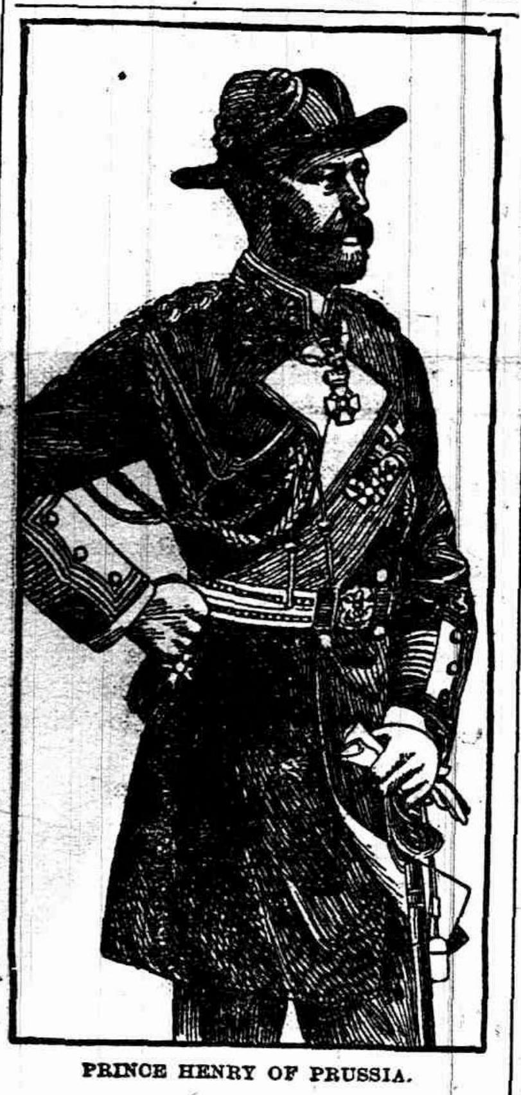
New York, Feb. 24.—Prince Henry of Prussia, representative of his brother, the emperor of Germany, at the launching of the latter's American-built yacht, reached New York Sunday and was cordially welcomed as a guest of the nation. The land batteries that guard the outer harbor sounded the first greeting in a ponderous salute of 21 guns, the rifles of a special naval squadron, assembled in his honor, re-echoed the sentiment.

Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, commander of the special squadron and honorary aide to the prince, left the flagship Illinois at 9:40 in the naval tug Nina. With him were Capt. G. A. Converse, his chief of staff; Flag Lieutenant Frederick Chapin, Ensign Frank T. Evans, aide, and Capt. Von Rebeur-Pacchwitz, naval attache at Washington embassy of the German government. They were all in full dress uniform. The Nina met the Kron Prinz beyond Fort Wadsworth, and swinging around on the starboard side of the liner, steamed up the bay. Prince Henry, attired in the uniform of an admiral of the German navy and surrounded by his naval and military staff in brilliant uniform, stood on the bridge of the liner. As the naval tug drew nearer to the side of the steamship Prince Henry and Admiral Evans caught sight of each other and exchanged informal salutes. The distance from steamer to tug was too great for conversation, however. As the two vessels moved in past Fort Wadsworth the first of the salutes of 21 guns was fired. As the first gun sounded the Prince advanced to the end of the bridge of the Kron Prinz and stood at attention. As he passed the big American flag floating over the fortifications he touched his cap in salute, and the members of his suite did likewise. The flag at the jackstaff of the Kron Prinz was dipped, and the German naval band accompanying the prince played "The Star Spangled Banner." The guns of Fort Wadsworth were not silent before those across the Narrows at Fort Hamilton boomed out their salute. When that ceremony was over the Kron Prinz was stopped and the Nina hauled around to her port side and Admiral Evans and his staff boarded her. Admiral Evans was escorted forward at once, and in the quarters of Capt. A. Richter, master of the Kron Prinz, he and the prince met. The prince came forward and taking the hand of the naval officer, shook it warmly.



PRINCE HENRY OF PRUSSIA.

"I am very glad to see you, sir," said the admiral. "Everybody in the United States is waiting to welcome you. It is my pleasure, sir, to formally greet you in their behalf."

"I thank you, sir, and through you, the people of your country," responded the prince. "I am very glad to be here and on this splendid day. The emperor directed me to convey his compliments to you, admiral, and I do so with very great pleasure."

After a brief halt the liner moved ahead and and at 10:50 was abreast of the special squadron off Tompkinsville. When the Kron Prinz came abreast of Governor's Island there was another salute and the prince again stood at attention until the last of the 21 guns was fired.

New York and its surroundings have rarely shown to greater advantage than in the sunlight, with the added brightness that came from the glistening snow, and the royal visitor did not leave the bridge during the run up the bay.

The last greeting in the run up the river was from the imperial yacht Hohenzollern, which is to be the home of the prince while in New York. She wore a full dress of flags and her white paint, with its trimming of gold, shone in the brilliant sun. The Kron Prinz was abreast of her pier at noon and was quickly warped into her berth.

Prince Henry disembarked at 12:55 p. m. to the Hohenzollern. The prince was met at the bottom of the gang plank by Admiral von Baudissin, commander of the Hohenzollern, and his officers.

The first of his callers to arrive after he had boarded the Hohenzollern was General Brooke, U. S. A., accompanied by two aides. Admiral Barker and Captain West, representing the United States navy, followed, and then came the German ambassador at Washington and his brilliantly-attired suite. Following him came the special representative of the president of the United States, headed by Dr. Hill, first assistant secretary of state, and including Gen. Corbin, Col Bingham and Commander Cowles. Capt. Nathan Sargent then called as the special representative of Admiral Dewey. The list of callers was ended with the mayor's party.

About an hour was spent by the Prince in receiving his callers and in making an admiral's inspection of the troops and crew of the Hohenzollern. Then followed a lunch.

The luncheon, which was informal, was finished about 3 o'clock, and then the prince announced that he would hepay the ship all his official visits.

The prince boarded the tug Nina at 3:30 to repay his calls, which he did, afterward returning to the Hohenzollern for dinner.

Prince Henry gave a dinner last night on board the imperial yacht Hohenzollern. Later he attended a reception given in his honor by the Deutscher Verein at the clubhouse of the organization. From the clubhouse the prince was driven to the Twenty-third street ferry of the Pennsylvania railroad, where he took the ferryboat for the depot in Jersey City.

The North Atlantic served to the big Kron Prinz Wilhelm five days of weather that tested Prince Henry's sea legs. But the prince showed his sailorly qualities and never missed a meal. Each afternoon and evening found him in the smoking room, and in spite of wind, waves and spray he spent an hour on the bridge.

Probably never before was the smoking room of a liner so frequented by women passengers as was that of the Kron Prinz Wilhelm all the way over. Whenever it was sought by Prince Henry he was sure to find among its occupants many of the sex, and he seemed to take their scrutiny in a good-natured way. Some of them were heard to order the same kind of beer the prince was drinking.

His royal highness and party occupied a table in a far corner, or sort of wing, of the main dining saloon. A partition ran half way across, hiding a part of the royal table from a portion of the main dining-room. But the prince requested that the greater part of the partition be taken down, and the wide opening thus made was transformed into an arch and decorated. The change made the prince's corner seem more like a part of the main dining saloon, and the passengers facing his corner at meals could see him and his partly plainly.

Saturday morning he invited an American party, with whom he had spent the evening before, to take a look through the ship, and he explained every part of the machinery to them as an expert. Not one of the party had said a word about it being Washington's birthday. After the tour of inspection, the prince invited them to his room, where he opened champagne. "Now, gentlemen of America," said he, "let us drink to George Washington."

His consideration for others and his democratic ways gained for the prince the liking of every one of his fellow-passengers. The American passengers, particularly, were characteristically enthusiastic in their praise.

MORE TROOPS TO BARCELONA.

Men Experimenting With Explosives Caused Trouble.

Madrid, Feb. 24.—A council of ministers was in session here last night to discuss means to maintain public order. The general situation is greatly improved. Several labor societies have declined to join the strike. Official telegrams declare that order prevails everywhere in the provinces.

More troops have been drafted to Barcelona, but it is hoped the worst of the troubles is now over.

At Sarria, a village near Barcelona, some men were arrested for experimenting with explosives. One of these men fired upon the police and a fight ensued, in which one policeman and one workman were killed and two men wounded. At Pedrelbes two strikers were killed in a conflict with the police.

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 22.—Special Agents Gregory and Dowling of the treasury department seized $150 worth of clothing at the rooms of S. McGeagh and O. L. Riker, 47 Madison avenue, who are students at the Detroit College of Medicine, and arrested the young men. It is charged that they smuggled the clothing over from Windsor and are liable to a section of the law which imposes a fine, not to exceed $5,000 or not to exceed two years' imprisonment, or both. They were allowed to go on their personal recognizance to appear on Monday for arraignment.

RELEASED AT LAST

Miss Stone, Mme. Tsilka and Baby Now Free.

HAPPENED NEAR STRUMITZA

All Are Well—Spencer Eddy States Brigands Made the Capture to Aid in Freedom of Macedonia From Turkey.

Constantinople, Feb. 24.—Miss Ellen M. Stone, the American missionary, who with Mme. Tsilka, was captured by brigands in the district of Salonica Sept. 3 last, has been released and arrived at Strumitza, Macedonia, at 3 o'clock Sunday morning.

Nobody was at Strumitza to meet Miss Stone, as the brigands had given no indication where they proposed to release the prisoners. Mme. Tsilka and her baby were also released at the same time. They are all well. Miss Stone immediately made herself known to the authorities at Strumitza.

The first news of Miss Stone's release was contained in a telegram received by Mr. Dickinson, the American consul-general at Constantinople, from the American vice-consul at Salonica. The telegram gives no details of the release. As Strumitza is near the Salonica Uskub railroad, Miss Stone will proceed to Salonica without delay.

New York, Feb. 24.—Spencer Eddy, first secretary of the negotiations for the release of Miss Ellen M. Stone and Mrs. Tsilka, arrived here Sunday on the Kron Prinz Wilhelm. In an interview he said the brigands captured an American rather than any other missionary, because they believed the Americans had the most money and would be likely to pay the ransom.

"Did the brigands want the money for themselves?" Mr. Eddy was asked.

"No, they did not; and that is where the people in America do not understand this case. It is entirely a political matter and all the people in Macedonia are in sympathy with the kidnaping, for they believe it is a step toward freeing Macedonia from Turkish rule, the same as Bulgaria has been, and the money they demanded ($100,000) was intended for the Macedonian cause.

"If we had been dealing with professional brigands, who wanted money pure and simple, instead of the political ones, Miss Stone would have been released long ago. It is very likely that this capture was deliberated upon for a long time, and the victims selected were considered best to serve the cause."

"Won't Turkey attempt to punish the ringleaders?"

"Turkey will have a problem on her hands if she does, for the Macedonians have risen up as one man in their determisnation to be freed from Turkey, and this kidnaping of the two American missionaries may be called chapter one in their plan for liberty."

SENATORS CAME TO BLOWS.

South Carolina's Members Used Fists —Suspensions Likely.

Washington, Feb. 24.—One of the most sensational incidents in the history of the senate occurred Saturday when Senators Tillman and McLaurin, the members of the upper house from South Carolina, came to blows. The fist fight was the result of the declaration by Mr. McLaurin that a statement regarding him made by Mr. Tillman was "a wilful, malicious and deliberate lie." He had hardly spoken the words when Mr. Tillman jumped at him and a fist fight followed, which was stopped by the intervention of the sergeant-at-arms and two or three senators. The South Carolinans were declared in contempt of the senate. They were permitted to make apologies.

The chief topic of interest in senatorial circles Sunday, and in fact everywhere in official Washington, was the fight in the senate. There has been a number of conferences among senators as to what should be done to preserve the dignity of the senate and to manifest its sentiment with reference to the two senators who violated its traditions. While no plan of procedure has been agreed upon, it is learned that there will be very deliberate action, and it is said to be more than likely that it will be not less than 30 days before the South Carolina senators will be restored to their full powers as senators, this deliberation on their case being in the nature of a punishment, since they will not be allowed to address the senate or vote until no longer in contempt of the senate.

McGovern Beat Sullivan.

Louisville, Ky., Feb. 24.—Terry McGovern defeated Dave Sullivan Saturday night after 15 rounds of as desperate fighting as were ever seen in any ring. There has seldom been seen a battle where the issue was more in doubt. In one round it would be Sullivan and in the next McGovern. Then Sullivan would come strong again and even things up once more. In the majority of rounds McGovern was on the aggressive, and Sullivan was forced to do far more defensive work than his opponent. He put up a wonderful fight, however, was game to the core, and lost the fight more through a blunder of his own than because he was knocked out. When the finish came, however, he was groggy and going fast.

A THIRD ARREST.

Detroit's Noted Bank Wrecker Twice in Court Friday.

Detroit. Feb. 22.—New complaints were issued yesterday for Frank C Andrews and Henry R. Andrews, based upon the false report to the commissioner of banking of the City Savings bank's condition at the close of business Feb. 5, 1901. It not only shows that the overdrafts were grossly misrepresented, but also indicates that most of the other important items in the report were falsified to a startling extent.

Frank Andrews was arraigned at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon before Judge Whelan. He stood again as a prisoner in the hands of the police in open court. It was but a few hours previous that he was placed in the same prisoner's dock along with hardened criminals for examination under the first charge of looting a bank, which examination was adjourned without action.

"In view of the bonds already given by the prisoner," began Attorney Baker, "we ask that he be released on his personal bond on this particular charge. We stand ready to give the bond already fixed on the previous charges, $25,000."

"The court sees no reason to change the amount of the bail mentioned this morning, $50,000," remarked Judge Whelan.

"The court understands that the $50,000 is intended to include the entire bonds covering the former charges." Prosecuting Attorney Hunt explained. "The bail shall be $50,000 in this case," was Judge Whelan's response.

Andrews did not have the bail, now amounting to $75,000, to offer, consequently he was escorted back to jail, where he remains until Feb. 28, the date set by Police Judge Whelan for his examination.

Detective Lombard was sent to serve Cashier H. R. Andrews the third warrant. At 5 p. m. word arrived that he was too sick to be moved, and the court officers dismissed themselves. It was agreed to call for the cashier's appearance in court this morning.

Following is a complete list of the securities turned over to the City Savings bank by Frank C. Andrews:

Homer Warren block, Woodward ave. (equity)	$200,000
Ingils block (equity)	60,000
Woodward and High property (equity)	60,000
Clairview farm, Grosse Pointe (equity)	80,000
Woodward ave. flats (equity)	75,000
Home on Woodward avenue (equity)	75,000
Eighteenth street (equity)	50,000
Real estate contracts	15,000
Total real estate	$615,000
340,000 shares in Ophir Mining Co	$ 85,000
Boat Homer Warren and barge (equity)	40,000
Sale of Mammoth mine	32,500
Two accounts assigned to the bank	32,500
Tiewaukee mine	70,000
Total assets turned over (Andrews's figures)	$876,000

It is stated that Andrews also turned over about $200,000 worth of personal property, not included in this schedule.

A Brutal Assault.

Battle Creek, Mich., Feb. 22.—Sheriff Williams went to Lansing yesterday afternoon with an application for requisition papers for Charles Secord, now under arrest in Milwaukee. Secord is charged with criminal assault on Hattie Allen, a 22-year-old deaf mute, in this city on Feb. 7. Secord met the girl at Kalamazoo last fall and opened a correspondence with her. He came here on the above date and went to her house in the afternoon. She was alone and he is said to have taken advantage of her muteness in such a brutal manner that the girl has not been out of bed since. Secord was formerly porter at the Morton house, Grand Rapids.

Dog Saved a Family.

Bay City, Mich., Feb. 22.—Stephen Bendowski, of 827 South Grant street, owns a dog which yesterday displayed almost human knowledge. Bendowski's house caught fire from a defective chimney and the smoke awakened the dog. Divining that something was wrong, the animal rushed to the bedside of his master, and by clawing at the clothes succeeded in awakening him. Bendowski hastily gathered his family and hustled them into the street, subsequently calling the firemen.

Bryan Spoke at Alma.

Alma, Mich., Feb. 22.—W. J. Bryan, on his way from Ionia to Mt. Pleasant, spent a few hours in Alma yesterday and delivered a short address in the college chapel, where he was greeted by a large audience. In introducing the speaker, President Bruske remarked that for once Col. Bryan had the honor of occupying the president's chair.

An Honest Bank Failure.

Hillsdale, Mich., Feb. 22.—The jury in the case of Banker Charles Brandes brought in a verdict of acquittal. Brandes's bank failed about a year ago. He paid depositors in full, but left several creditors out in the cold. The suit was for the purpose of showing an intention to defraud.

Ten Families Burned Out.

Port Huron, Mich., Feb. 22.—Ten families domiciled in the old Larned house were forced to leave precipitately yesterday afternoon by fire. Bedding and furniture were tossed through the windows, and the building, which is one of the oldest in the city, was gutted.

Killed His Neighbor.

Parsons, W. Va., Feb. 22.—L. F. Gladwell, a union veteran, aged 60 years, last night shot and killed Clark Nagle, a neighbor, at Hambleton, near here. Gladwell, in a fit of anger, threatened to kill his wife, and Nagle attempted to enter Gladwell's room to quiet him. As he entered Gladwell fired with a shotgun, the load striking Nagle in the stomach. He fell over and died almost instantly. Gladwell is under arrest.

Killed in Head-on Collision.

Antigo, Wis., Feb. 24.—A head-on collision between freight trains occurred late Saturday night near Summit Lake, on the Northwestern railroad, 16 miles north of this city. Fred Lyons and Roy Middaugh, brakemen, and Bert Nightzer, fireman, were instantly killed, and Engineer Harry Hogan was badly hurt.

THE SHADOW ...OF DEATH

[Copyright, 1901, by C. B. Lewis.]

The town of Saugor, India, lies in the basin formed by the Bundelcund range of mountains on the east and the Vindhya range on the west and is shut in to the north and south by spurs from those ranges.

One morning in the year 1867 news came to Jubbulpoor, which is a large city sixty miles south of Saugor, that the civil commissioner of the latter town had been carried off by a tiger. No tiger had been seen within fifteen miles of Saugor for years, but as the commissioner was riding in the suburbs about sundown he was pulled from his saddle and carried off by a beast lying in wait in a bit of jungle beside the highway. A servant witnessed the tragedy, and he reported the tiger as full grown, but not above the average. He gave the alarm, and a hundred people turned out, but the tiger carried his prey across fields and highways a distance of four miles and then entered a heavy jungle. This was the coming of what they called the Shadow of Death. There were no troops and but three English families at Saugor. Officials went up from Jubbulpoor to investigate, and six riflemen from the Tenth National infantry followed them. Before any one had reached Saugor the tiger had killed a mail rider thirty miles to the north. Two nights later he carried off a villager fifteen miles to the south.

Within a week there was a cry of alarm all up and down the valley, and fifty men were put in the field as hunters. A reward amounting to about $500 was offered for the destruction of the man eater, and villagers and farmers were assured that his career would be brief. On the evening of the sixth day after the tragedy at Saugor the tiger returned to the outskirts of the town, leaped over a campfire beyond which sat an English civilian named Baker, and the man was seized and carried off with twenty people within a stone's throw. Baker was a sportsman and had come up from Jubbulpoor to join in the hunt. There were four men within twenty feet of him as he was seized. The tiger gripped him by the shoulder, tossed him across his back and went away into the darkness with a snarl. When daylight came, it was proved that he carried the man eight miles before being lost in a ravine. At one spot the beast, burdened as he was with the weight of 160 pounds, leaped a ditch eighteen feet wide. This made the fourth victim in six days, and during that time the big cat had traversed a distance of 150 miles.

Had a plague suddenly fallen upon the people they could not have been more alarmed. In one day half the inhabitants of Saugor deserted their homes, and in a day or two more the highways and fields were abandoned by the farmers for several miles around. The hunters got out and beat up the country, but while they were at work the tiger traveled forty-five miles up the valley and killed a farmer and his wife and two children in their hut and carried the body of the farmer to the foothills. Word had scarcely reached the hunters when the beast shifted his quarters by twenty miles and carried off a woman who was getting water at a spring. A hundred soldiers were now ordered up from Jubbulpoor, and sportsmen flocked to the valley until nearly 200 men had taken up the chase. There was an interval of two days between the tiger's sixth and seventh victim. He traveled eighteen miles in this time, and, entering a village just at sundown, he seized the head man and sped away. On this occasion he was struck with clubs and cooking utensils in the hands of the villagers, but he would not let go his hold. Only twenty-four hours later the beast ambushed and killed an English sportsman on a highway.

After the eighth victim had been recorded the reward was raised to $1,500, and the number of hunters was increased to 300, but it was too late to check the stampede. It is a matter of record that twenty-seven villages and 320 farms were abandoned in ten days. The tiger traveled such distances that no one in the valley felt safe, and he was so daring that the superstition of the natives was aroused. The ninth victim was another mail rider, the tenth a farmer and the eleventh a French tourist who sat on the veranda of a public bungalow when seized. Between these last three victims the tiger traveled over a hundred miles. It was four days between the eleventh and twelfth victim, and there was hope that the man eater had left the valley.

The twelfth victim was one of the soldiers detailed on the hunt, and for the seven days succeeding the tiger claimed a victim every day, making nineteen in all. From first to last the beast was sighted perhaps a hundred times and fired upon by a hundred different men, but none of their bullets struck him. He was pursued by horsemen and footmen over 400 miles, but could never be driven to bay. He had stampeded a district forty miles long by twenty-eight broad and killed nineteen people when his death came about in a very curious manner. A patrol of three hunters was stationed under a tree at a certain point to watch for him. A hyena came about and annoyed them, and as a last resort he was fired upon to drive him away. In the darkness he was not a fair target, and the bullet missed, but it crashed full into the brain of the Shadow of Death, who was creeping up in rear of the hyena. This was not known until daylight came; but, accident though it was, it rid the valley of an awful terror, brought the people back to their homes, and the day is still celebrated from end to end of the valley as a sort of Fourth of July.

His Fortune.

"Who is that handsome young man standing over there?" inquired an old gentleman of a rich old lady at a party.

"That's my son-in-law. He's a very brilliant young man; made a large fortune by the law."

"Indeed!" said the old gentleman. How's that?"

"The law made him my daughter's husband."—London Answers.

Her Pet Pig.

A young woman in London took a pig in infancy and brought it up, as she says, "like a Christian." Complaint was made to the authorities the other day, and the sanitary officers who went to investigate found the pig in bed between two white sheets, with its head on a pillow and its body covered with a white lace counterpane.

THE SUBTERRANEAN CHAMBER

[Original.]

The following true story was told me by a German gentleman, now an American citizen. I give it, as nearly as I can remember, in his own words:

"When I was a student at the university, a number of us made up a party to visit a ruined castle on the Rhine. How old it was, how long it had been a ruin, I do not know, and I question if there is any authentic record. It was doubtless built and used during the dark ages when men were but half civilized and their treatment of each other was often as dark as the age. It was in a very crumbling condition, and we found it impossible to touch a stone or a bit of mortar without its falling. It seemed to me as I walked about amid its broken walls and dark corridors that it was a link between barbarism and civilization.

"After seeing all there was of interest above ground one of our number noticed a door that had not been opened.

"'Where does that door lead to?' he asked the guide.

"'Below.'

"'Cannot we go down there?'

"'Not on any account.'

"'Have you ever been down there?'

"'No, and I would not go there for the world.'

"Young fellows that we were, full of a desire for adventure, we resolved to visit the subterranean portion of the castle. We offered the guide different amounts to permit us to descend, each time naming a larger sum till the bribe amounted to what his regular pay would be for a month. Then, but not till we had all promised to keep the matter a secret, he yielded. Furnishing us with a couple of lanterns, he unfastened the door, and we passed through.

"We found a spiral staircase, which we descended. The walls were wet and slimy, and we dared not touch anything for fear of its falling and bringing more down with it. I was in constant dread lest the steps I trod on should give way. At the bottom we came to an open space, from which led a passage.

"'I wonder where that leads to?' said one.

"'Don't know and don't care. I wouldn't go there,' said another.

"We stood hesitating for a moment, when the first speaker said:

"'I have come here to see, and I am going to see it all.'

"With that he started down the passage, followed by the party.

"We had not gone far before we came to a veritable chamber of horrors. In one part was a pit full of the bones of human beings, while, for the matter of that, bones were scattered everywhere. Picking up one, it was a forearm; another was a foot, another a rib, another a skull. On the slimy floors, on the dank walls, crawled vermin, toads, moles, while from the walls exuded slimy moisture. The loathesome things crawled in and out of the broken walls, among the slowly crumbling bones.

"But the horror that excited a chain of thrilling speculations was in a niche in the walls. It was a human skeleton held in place by an iron band around the body, which was in turn chained to the wall. The flesh having rotted away, the band had slipped and the body had partly fallen.

"It was plain that centuries before in this chamber people were placed to die. Who were they? What was their offense? Were they simply enemies of the feudal lord of the castle, enemies of the state, offenders against the laws or martyrs to their religious convictions? Were they placed there during the period of the breaking up of the Roman empire and the formation of the new civilization, when the Teutonic barbarians were being converted to the new Christian faith? Were they early Christians sacrificed to superstitions that were passing away? Was it when Charlemagne was building up the empire of western Europe? Did their burial in this dungeon emanate from the feudal system when each of the castles was a fortress.

"These questions coursed through my brain, not on account of their probability, but as fancies excited by the singular spectacle. But a moment was spent in their flashing before me, then I began to think who this murdered throng were. They were most likely sacrificed during the period next preceding the decline and fall of the feudal castles, when the reformation was sweeping over Europe and the prisons were full of the followers of Martin Luther. As I looked at the skeleton chained in the niche it seemed that I was for the moment in touch with that new spiritual birth when the Christian from being persecuted became persecutor. Was he not one of those men who asserted and maintained their right to think for themselves, a martyr to the inquisition?

"Suddenly while we were gazing, every moment becoming more awestruck, the lights in our lanterns, owing doubtless to the noxious vapors, were extinguished.

"It is impossible to imagine anything more terrifying. Whether it was imagination inflamed by terror or a peculiar effect on the retina of the eye, I could still see the crumbling walls, the slippery floor, the crawling vermin, the bones, but, above all, the skeleton in the niche. The effect must have been largely from the imagination, for the thing seemed to move.

"Giving a wild yell, I dashed toward the bottom of the staircase, only to knock my head against the wall. Unconscious of pain, I pushed on, found the stairs, climbed them among the struggling mass of my companions and at last found myself in light and in pure air."

F. A. MITCHEL.

Looking and Seeing.

There is much in knowing how to see sights. The discreet and skillful person, when confronted with a variety of attractions, will carefully select those that are for him the best and then will devise means to see them with the least wear and tear. But there are excitable people who set out to see everything, tire themselves out, see only half of anything and are dissatisfied in the end.

Easily a Good Thing.

"Did you say that hair restorer is a good thing?" asked the patron.

"Yes," answered the barber, with some slight hesitation; "it's a good thing. We sell several bottles a week at a dollar a bottle."

"But how do you know it's a good thing?"

"Because the profit on every bottle is 75 cents."—Washington Star.

"I Will Love You Always"

[Original.]

There should be added to the saying "Love laughs at locksmiths" another equally true, "Love laughs at differences in station." One of the most striking examples of the latter is the love of a cobbler for Maria Antoinette, queen of France.

General the Marquis de La Fayette had an estate in Auvergne. In the forests of beech and chestnut near by dwelt men who followed every variety of woodworking. There were coopers, wooden shoe makers and makers of clapboards and laths, besides charcoal burners and resin gatherers. These people dwelt in their rude huts, toiling side by side, and when work was over for the day mingling in their sylvan sports.

Among them was an orphan boy, called by his neighbors Darazon, a corruption of Deraison, meaning lacking wit. In his hut under a musket on the wall he kept a picture of Marie Antoinette, and his neighbors said laughingly that he was in love with the queen. One day General Lafayette, while visiting his estate, told these people how the court at Versailles played the parts of millers, shepherds, milkmaids and the like, each dressed for the character assumed, all wearing wooden shoes, the queen included.

"What!" said Darazon, who was listening. "The queen wear wooden shoes?"

"Yes."

"If I make her a pair, will you take them to her?"

"Certainly, if you make them fine enough for her."

In Auvergne the peasant makes a pair of fine wooden shoes for his bride, who treasures them through life. Darazon set to work to make such a pair. They were of chestnut, finely carved, and on the toe of each was a heart encircled with rays, above which were the letters "T. T. L. V." Darazon took them to the chateau and gave them to the marquis.

Lafayette took the sabots, and when he saw the letters "T. T. L. V." he smiled, for he knew their meaning, which was written on the sabots of all the expectant brides in Auvergne. He assured their maker that he would fulfill his promise to give them to the queen. Darazon went to his hut and underneath his portrait traced the letters he had carved on the sabots. General Lafayette set out for Paris and thence to Versailles, where he found the queen in the Trianon and presented her with the shoes.

Marie Antoinette was greatly pleased with the present, real country sabots made especially for her. She understood that the heart surrounded by rays stood for the Virgin's head, but what meant the letters "T. T. L. V?" she asked the marquis.

"'T'aimerai touta la vida' (I will love you all my life). It is the patois of Auvergne. As one would express it, the French would be, 'Je t'aimerai toute la vie.'" The marquis laughed as he thus interpreted Darazon's message.

The queen did not laugh. On the contrary, she was very serious, being deeply touched with the love of the simple creature.

"Poor fellow!" she said. "The sabots are a trifle large for me, but so much the better for the reward they will contain." Then she whispered in the ear of the Princess de Lambelle, who took the sabots and went out. She soon returned, however, bringing them with her filled with goldpieces.

"Marquis," she said, "place this gold in a box and send it to the cobbler, with the queen's thanks."

Lafayette procured a handsome box, put the gold in it and sent it to Darazon at Auvergne.

Then came the revolution. A mob stormed the palace of Versailles. The Marquis de la Fayette was indicted. The king, queen and their children were placed under guard. Darazon heard with anguish what had befallen his idol. He listened to every bit of news eagerly, becoming more and more gloomy as the fortunes of the royal family declined. Finally he heard that they had been taken to the Temple. One morning soon after, his hut was empty. Both his musket and his picture of the queen were gone. He had departed for Paris, taking both with him, besides the goldpieces the queen had sent him sewed in his vest. The picture he had hung around his neck, knowing that if discovered with the likeness of the hated Bourbon queen on his person he would be arrested and meet the fate of a royalist. He traveled by night, hiding in the woods by day. Finally, on the 17th of October, 1793, worn with fatigue and illness, he reached Paris. In the Place de Bastille he met a citizen revolutionist of whom he asked the way to the Temple.

"Why do you go there?" asked the man.

"To rescue the queen."

"The Austrian? She was executed yesterday."

Maddened by disappointment and grief and rage, Darazon raised his musket, but before he could fire the revolutionist struck him, laying him on the pavement, then shouted:

"An aristocrat!"

A crowd gathered and, to discover the countryman's identity, searched him, finding on his breast the picture of the queen with the four suspicious letters on it, "T. T. L. V." With yells they carried the poor cobbler to the river Seine and threw him in.

Thus died this simple savatier of Auvergne, who loved a queen and dared to acquaint her with his love.

How to Become Wealthy.

In a New Hampshire city there dwells an octogenarian physician who in addition to his wide medical skill is known far and wide as a dispenser of blunt philosophy. The other day a young man of his acquaintance called at his office.

"I have not come for pills this time, doctor," said the visitor, "but for advice. You have lived many years in this world of toil and trouble and have had much experience. I am young, and I want you to tell me how to get rich."

The aged practitioner gazed through his glasses at the young man and in a deliberate tone said:

"Yes, I can tell you. You are young and can accomplish your object if you will. Your plan is this: First, be industrious and economical. Save as much as possible and spend as little. Pile up the dollars and put them at interest. If you follow out these instructions, by the time you reach my age you'll be rich as Crœsus and as mean as hades." —Buffalo Commercial.

By the time we get what we want in life we want something else a great deal more.—Saturday Evening Post.

Stop the Blight

It is a sad thing to see fine fruit trees spoiled by the blight. You can always tell them from the rest. They never do well afterwards but stay small and sickly.

It is worse to see a blight strike children. Good health is the natural right of children. But some of them don't get their rights. While the rest grow big and strong one stays small and weak.

Scott's Emulsion can stop that blight. There is no reason why such a child should stay small. Scott's Emulsion is a medicine with lots of strength in it—the kind of strength that makes things grow.

Scott's Emulsion makes children grow, makes them eat, makes them sleep, makes them play. Give the weak child a chance. Scott's Emulsion will make it catch up with the rest.

Rev. W. F. Jones, of Tecumseh, delivered two excellent sermons at the Presbyterian church Sunday. In the morning he gave an elequent discourse on the sin of worrying. It was filled with practical precepts and the delivery was forceful and interesting. Rev. The sixth entertainment of the Star Course last evening by The de Barrie Gill—Johnson company. It was one of the most pleasant evening's entertainment this season. Mrs. Gill is an exquisite contralto singer, and her readings were such as to receive repeated applause from the audience. The Chariot race from Ben Hur and Arena scene from Quo Vadis were powerfully rendered and heartily received. Miss Johnson is a master of the harp, her selections were very fine and rendered in an artistic manner.

FEBRUARY 22

The 3rd and 4th Grade Pupils of the WEST BRANCH

Celebrated Washington's Birthday Friday Afternoon.

Visitors to Miss Richardson's room at the west branch school were delightfully entertained by the pupils of the third and fourth grades Feb. 21. The room was neatly decorated with flags and bunting, while upon the blackboard were pictures of "The Boston Tea Party," drawn by Florence Aten, an American Eagle," by Edith Wilson, "George Washington" by Laura Moehn and several cups of tea (not taxed) by Josephine Orr.

The program was opened by the school singing America followed by a reading entitled, "The Boston Tea Party" by Florence Linton; a solo, "Boston Tea," by Florence Aten and a dialogue "Boston Boys," in which ten boys take part, Earle Brown as "General Gage" and Georgie Witheral as "Corporal"

After a recitation by Ralph Bowers and a hatchet story by Perry Satterthwaite, wherein he shows much originality and adaptness for story writing, a company of boys were generaled through a hatchet song and drill by Glenn Lanning, after which he gave a recitation that proved quite eloquent for such a little fellow.

A solo entitled "Heroes" by Georgie Witheral and an organ solo by Edith Wilson, were followed by a song, "O Washington" by the entire school, consisting of Donald Wallinger, Hazel Mobbs, Ralph Bowers, Roy Bowers, Ralph Packard, George Witheral, Roy Blesing, John McCann, Harry Chiverall, Roger Anthony, Leon Fagan, Myrtle Flint, of the third grade, and Glenn Lanning, Fred Bice, James Moody, Perry Satterthwaite, Heman Lockwood, Dale Hodges, Earle Brown, Lena Lockwood, Josephine Orr, Laura Moehn, Florence Linton, Edith Wilson, Dorothy Wood, Florence Aten, Hattie Teachout, Josephine Hayden, Bessie Hamilton, Helen Coleson, Della Holloway, Elmer Swartz and Willie Kelley.

The program was continued with a recitation by Dale Hodges, a soldier drill by eighteen boys, a recitation by Harry Chiverall and a song "Three soldier boys" by Leon Fagan as soldier, Perry Satterthwaite as color bearer and Glenn Lanning as drummer boy.

The Marthas of the Revolution with their white caps, white aprons and peculiar ways, proved very amusing to the visitors. This was followed by a recitation by John McCann, a song "Red, White and Blue" by school, a reading "How the flag was made" by Lena Lockwood, "Making the flag," a reading by Josephine Orr and a flag drill in which thirteen girls took part.

A song entitled "Three little sisters" was sung by Florence Linton, Josephine Orr and Harriet Teachout, after which the school joined in singing "We're only little children" a wand drill and flag salute was next given by the entire school, which was executed in a very clever manner. After a flag song by the school the pupils were dismissed, each scholar feeling very proud to think he had contributed to the celebration of the Father of our Country."

Among the visitors at the exercises were the following: Mrs. J. Linton, Miss Taylor, Mrs. G. W. Jackson, Mrs. E. Lockwood, Mrs. Fred Teachout, Mrs. Coleson, Miss Strang, Mrs. W. Chiverall, Mrs. H. Richardson, Rev. S. Louisa Haight, Mrs. W. VanAntwerp, Mrs. N. B. Howland, Mrs. A. Richards, Mrs. J. Aten, Mrs. J. McKinney, Mrs. F. Bowers and daughter, Mrs. S. Mobbs, Mrs. E. Ford, Mrs. Moehn, Mrs. Mull, Mrs. C. Emerson, Mrs. Conklin, Mrs. Boyd, Mrs. F. Wood, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Patterson, Mrs. F. Fagan, Mrs. W. Brown, Mrs. M. Leonard, Mrs. N. Satterthwaite and Mrs. E. Blesing.

ROUND ABOUT US.

Mr. and Mrs. Eli Westfall are said to be the oldest couple in Hillsdale county, being 86 and 83 years of age respectively. More remarkable is the fact that they have been married 62 years. They reside in Hillsdale cily.—Hudson Post.

A telegram was received yesterday to the effect that Bert Carnes was killed at Wolverine, Mich. He was working in the woods, when a log rooled on him. Bert was a well-known resident of Hudson, and was a fine young man. His parents reside two miles north of the city. There are no detailed particulars of the accident.

When William Church failed to put in an appearance at the Bond post factory, in Adrian, on Wednesday, the 12th messengers were sent after him. They broke in the door of his house and found Church unconscious as result of breathing coal gas, he having failed to properly adjust the draught before retiring. He was resusitated.—Ex.

The local lodge of Elks is to be commended for its open-handed hospitality in the courtesy it showed Mr Bryan, to be their guest of honor at the reception tendered him after the lecture. It was a graceful compliment, fully appreciated by Mr. Bryan, and all the more so because he saw that it was from a sincere regard for the man, and from a desire to make his visit one that would be associated with pleasant recollections.—Adrian Press.

Wednesday morning at 2 o'clock a sister at St. Joseph's Academy doing duty as night watch, saw smoke coming from the basement, and the alarm of fire. The 103 pupils were awakened, and in a trifle over four minutes were dressed and in line facing the places of exit in the lower corridor. The trouble came from some cinders in a barrel in the basement and soon the girls were snugly tucked away under the bed clothes again. The fine discipline reflects much credit upon the teaching at the academy. We are glad it was but a scare.—Adrian Press.

SHOW WINDOWS

Very Beautiful Windows gotten up to Commemorate WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY

At McCann's and the New York Store.

There is nothing speaks better for the push and good business ability of a town than the show windows. Windows tastefully arranged with new goods, show painstaking enterprise on the part of the merchants and bring trade. Tecumseh has several merchants who are wide awake on the subject of window decoration and show at all times beautiful windows. For the twenty-second of February the decorations in McCann's store show the taking of much pains in taste and material, a shield, the American eagle, flags, bunting and a beautiful display of gents' furnishing goods together made a beautiful display appropriate to Washington's birthday.

The large show window at the New York store was also gotten up in appropriate shape, "Birthington's Wash Day" was very unique and natural. A darkey wash woman with tub and everything pertaining to the scrub room completed a nice show. In fact the windows at the New York store are always very neat and tasteful and it is said the decoration is designed by Mrs. Arnold and great taste and ability is displayed in the trimming.

The woman who has an architecture club and a musical criticism club, and a Spanish pronunciation class, and two hours a week in expression, with the avowed determination to make the most of herself and her perceptions is pretty likely to forget something. She is likely to forget that culture to come is not smuggled into her life mysteriously tangled in Spanish terminations and rythm, and Renaissance degradation in stone foundations. And that instead it is a thing of her heart, like her courtesy and her real charm, which is waiting to be let out. And gothic arches and motifs and the way they pronounce in Spain will help unlock the door within if she goes about them right or they will wall it up forever.

The club or association whose affairs are conducted by a half dozen of its select members, whose committees are always made up of the same people, and whose boards of managers are elected for life, will never know what real club life is. There is no opportunity for development in such organizations; death or removal from the community are the only opportunities for infusing new life into their work. A club is intended to develop its members, as well as to further the object of its existence.

It is in our power to make our lives a beneficence to those who come within our circle. Whether we will or no, the club movement is proving such a beneficence. Let us make our New Years's resolve this: That we will enlarge our vision, that we will broaden our sphere, that we will deepen our love to humanity, that we will be true to our best selves.

Mrs. May Wright Sewell says, "When women have worked in one club long enough to know each other's resources and the end of one another's resources as well, nothing can be more helpful than to visit another club; or, better still. for representatives of a number of clubs to meet for a visit about club matters."

Don't exaggerate; don't be hypocritical; don't say what you do not at all mean. But when the paper or talk has helped you and has interested you, tell the woman so who gave it. You don't know what a help and a comfort you may be just doing that.

"It is all right," said the Man, meditatively, "when the woman runs the club. With that I have no fault to find. But when the club runs the woman—well, what do you think yourself?"

Culture is a worthy end, and one to which we all aspire. But whose culture? Our own or our neighbor's?

Mills—Totten.

A quiet but happy wedding took place at the residence of Frank R. Totten, Belding, Mich., on Feburary 22, 1092, when Miss Mable Totten, of that city, was united in marriage to Mr. John Mills, of Saranac, Mich.

Promptly at eight o'clock they decended from the upper rooms. the officiating clergyman, Rev. A. O. Carman of the M. E. church, being in waiting pronounced the ceremony that united the happy twain.

Only the immediate relatives of the bride and groom were present. Many valuable and beautiful gifts were received including silver ware, china and linen, among which was a berry spoon given by the girls of the Richardson Silk Co., where she had been employed for nine years.

The bride was attired in white organdy and wore white roses, while the groom was dressed in the usual black and wore a bouquet of red carnations.

Excellent refreshments were served and after congratulations and amid showers of rice, the happy couple departed for their farm home in Berlin township.

The bride was born in the village of of Tecumseh Oct. 6, '77 and her parents moved from that place to Belding, Mich., in April 1883. She will probably be remembered by quite a few citizens of this place.

The Champion Thin Man.

A knot of men was gathered in the smoking room at the club the other evening. All ordinary topics had been exhausted, and they finally entered upon a contest to see who could tell the most remarkable story about the fat men or the lean men they had seen. A veritable Ananias was awarded first prize without a dissenting voice when he asserted that he had met in his travels a man so thin that he could "go through a flute without striking a note."

When Woods Decay.

Tests have been made to determine the variations in the length of time that is required to produce decay in different kinds of woods when buried under the surface of the ground. The birch and aspen were both found to decay in three years, the willow and the buckeye in four years, the maple and the red beech in five years, elm and ash in seven, while the larch, juniper and arbor vitæ were uninjured at the expiration of eight years.

Eskimo Mourning Customs.

All Eskimos are superstitious about death, and, although they hold festivals in memory of departed friends, they will usually carry a dying person to some abandoned hut, there to drag out his remaining days without food, medicine, water or attendance. After the death of a husband or a wife the survivor cuts the front hair short and fasts for twenty-five days.

A Contractor.

"What does your father do?" asked the teacher of the new boy.

"He's a contractor." was the reply.

"A railway contractor?"

"No, ma'am; a sausage contractor. He ties up the ends after another man has filled them."

Different Methods.

"Whatever became of Lamb?"

"Oh, he played the markets and went broke."

"And Wolff, what became of him?"

"Oh, he worked the markets and got rich."—Puck.

THEY ALL SAY SO.

Not only in Tecumseh, But in Every City and Town in the Union.

If the reader took the time and trouble to ask his fellow residents of Tecumseh, the simple question given below he would obtain the one answer If he would read the statements now being published in Tecumseh, which refers to this answer, it would surprise him to note that they number so many. As many more could be, and may be, published, but in the meantime ask the first person you meet what cures backache? The answer will be, Doan's Kidney Pills. Here is a citizen who endorses our claim:

Mr. C. Patterson, the well known sexton residing in the southeastern section of Tecumseh, says: "For over a year I had a soreness and pain in the small of the back at times quite severe more especially if I did a hard day's work or took cold, for it always settled in my kidneys. The kidney secretions were also discolored and irregular and I had all symptoms of aggravated kidney complaint. I heard several people praising Doan's Kidney Pills so concluding to try them I got a box at C. A. Wright's drug store and commenced the treatment I found it just suited my case for it helped me right from the start. It stopped the pain in my back and regulated and cleared up the kidney secretions. I have no hesitation in recommending Doan's Kidney Pills to anyone having any difficulty with their kidneys."

Doan's Kidney Pills for sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Mailed by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S.. Remember the name Doan and take no substitute.

The Impressionists paints what he sees: so does the itinerant advertising agent.

What's the secret of happy, vigorous health? Simply keeping the bowels, the stomach, the liver and kidneys strong and active. Burdock Blood Bitters does it.

An optimist is a man who looks on the bright side of everything so long as everything goes his way.

Scald head is an eczema of the scalp—very severe sometimes, but it can be cured. Doan's Ointment, quick and permanent in its results. At any drug store, 50 cents.

A Crank on Clothes.

Sir Harry Poland, a British magistrate noted for his brilliancy, was always careless in his dress. Once his family persuaded him to go to Poole and order a fashionably cut suit. To the chagrin of the household Sir Harry looked more outlandish in the new clothes than in his old ones. His brother-in-law went to see Poole about it.

"It is not my fault, sir," the tailor assured him. "Every care was taken, but how could we fit a gentleman who would insist upon being measured sitting down?"

And the only satisfaction that could be obtained from Sir Harry Poland himself later on was the dry comment: "Well, it's my business and not yours. I like to be comfortable. I spend three parts of my life sitting down, and I preferred to be measured so."

The Deserving One.

Hoyt, with a playwright friend, was once witnessing the production of a play—not his own—says the New York Clipper. The leading man was well known to be a poor "study," and this night was on very unfamiliar terms with his part. The voice of the prompter was continuously in evidence, though this was overlooked, for the actor was a great favorite.

Just before the end of the act Hoyt went out, but returned a moment later just as the curtain went down on deafening applause.

"Who are they calling for?" he asked of his friend, who answered by naming the leading man, whom, to spare his feelings, we will call X.

"——! (This stands for a little swear word.) I don't see what they want X for. I should think they would call for the prompter."

Artistic.

"An artistic girl," said the painting teacher, "is one who will pin blush roses upon a sky blue frock. An inartistic girl is one who will wear blue ribbon with a pink frock. Some eyes might not see any difference between the two combinations, but there's all the difference in the world. One girl has no warrant for what she does. The other has all nature for her authority."

Mrs. Fred Klebart and children returned Friday from Knoxville, Tenn., and will reside here. Mr. Klebart will remain in the south for the present.

Bert Lampkin and family leave Saturday for Ionia where they will make their future home. During their short stay here they have made many friends who regret losing them.

Fred Barnsdale and Miss Edna Redick were married at the home of the bride's parents in this village Monday at 1 p. m., Rev. Colvin performing the ceremony in the presence of only the immediate friends of the family. Mr. and Mrs. Barnsdale left on the afternoon train for a brief wedding journey, after which they will go to Ida, Mich., where they will reside. Hosts of friends extend congratulations to the young people who have been life long residents of Clinton.

Her Best Front.

It was at Nantucket one summer that a city visitor learned a new way of displaying one's personal adornments during a call upon one of the native Nantucketers. It was a nice old lady who was entertaining the strangers, and she was very anxious that they should see everything to advantage and that even she herself should make as good an appearance as possible. Unfortunately she had not been forewarned of the visit and was not entirely prepared for it.

"If I had only known you were coming," she said apologetically, "I should have had on my best front. This is only my second best, but you can see the other when you go out, for I always keep it in the front room."

Surely enough, on taking their leave, the visitors were piloted through the front room, and there in the inside of the melodeon, when a heavy green barege veil was carefully lifted, a nicely waved hair piece was to be seen, the hostess' best "front."

Spoke Too Late.

The good minister of a Scottish parish had once upon a time a great wish for an old couple to become teetotalers, which they were in nowise eager to carry out. After much pressing, however, they consented, laying down as a condition that they should be allowed to keep a bottle of "Auld Kirk" for medicinal purposes. About a fortnight afterward John began to feel his resolution weakening, but he was determined not to be the first to give way.

In another week, however, he collapsed entirely. "Jenny, woman," he said, "I've an awfu' pain in my heid. Ye micht gie me a wee drappie an' see gin it'll dee me ony guid."

"Well, gudeman," she replied, "ye're owre late o' askin', for ever sin' that bottle cam' into the hoose I've been bothered sae wi' pains i' my heid 't is a' dune, an' there's nae drappie left."

The Bug Bible.

The bug Bible was printed in 1549 by the authority of Edward VI., and its curiosity lies in the rendering of the fifth verse of the Ninety-first Psalm, which, as we know, runs, "Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night nor for the arrow which flieth by day," but in the above version ran, "So thou shalt not nede to be afraid of any bugges by night."

Ludicrous as this sounds, it is not etymologically without justification. "Bug" is derived from the Welsh word "bwg," which meant a hobgoblin or terrifying specter, a signification traceable in the word commonly in use today—"bugbear"—and Shakespeare once or twice uses the word in this primary sense, notably when he makes Hamlet say, "Such bugs and goblins in my life."

Fine China.

Fine china needs care in washing and drying and should never be placed in nervous or indifferent hands. Treated lovingly, china will last for years and even generations. Only a piece should be put in the tub at one time, the soap should be made into suds before putting anything in, and the water must be very warm, not hot. Finally rinse in water that's just the same—warm. A good supply of fine, soft towels is a necessity, and, thus equipped, the washing of china is not a hard task. China will shine beautifully if wiped out of clear warm water.

A Mint Julep Tragedy.

A northern man stopped at the home of an Alabama planter of the old school and was cordially invited to "Light, sah, and be welcome."

He "lit" and was forthwith invited to take a toddy, in accord with the Alabama rules of hospitality.

"Why," he said, "I saw a nice bed of mint back there. Suppose I get some of it and make a mint julep instead of a toddy."

"A what, sah?" said the planter.

"A mint julep. Haven't you ever tried them?"

"No, sah, nevah; but I'm willing, sah."

They did try the fascinating beverage, not once, but many times, and the northern man went away next day with reluctance.

Two years later his business took him there again. At the gate he was met by the old colored butler, on whose hat, as he doffed it, was seen a band of crape.

"Where's your master, sir?" he inquired of the old darky.

"He's dead, sah; died yestiddy."

"Dead! I'm shocked. What was the cause?"

"Why, sah, 'bout two years ago one o' dem Yankees cum down heah and showed ole marse how to drink weeds in his red likker, and he never stopped twell he died fum it."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Cheap Meals In London.

"Speaking of cheap restaurants," said a gentleman who has just returned from a visit to London to a Washington Star writer, "reminds me of a dining saloon in the Whitechapel district of London where a relishing and fairly substantial meal may be had for a halfpenny, or 1 cent in our money. This cheap repast is not served up in the shape of a cut from a joint and two vegetables. It is a big brown pie, very juicy and very hot. The absence of beefsteak is evident when you cut the pie, but you find inside a liberal sprinkling of sheep's liver, onions and turnips and a plentiful supply of gravy. For a halfpenny extra two slices of bread and a cup of tea are supplied. Between the hours of 12 and 2 the poor and hungry from all parts of the east end of the city flock to the dining room. Most of the patrons are shoeblacks, penny toy men, costermongers and now and then young clerks whose salaries will not permit them to indulge in a more costly dinner."

Nine Tailors Make a Man.

"Nine tailors make a man" grew out of the old custom of bell ringing. The ringing of bells was formerly practiced from a belief in their efficacy to drive away evil spirits. The "tailors" in the above phrase is a corruption of the word "tellers," or strokes tolled at the end of a knell. In some places the departure of an adult was announced by nine strokes in succession. Six were rung for a woman and three for a child. Hence it came to be said by those listening for the announcement, "Nine tellers make a man." As this custom became less general and the allusion less generally understood there was an easy transition from the word "tellers" to the more familiar one "tailors."

That inevitable joker, Curran, took advantage of this popular saying to poke fun in a good natured way at his hosts on the occasion of his being entertained at dinner by 18 of the Guild of Tailors. Curran on leaving rose and said, "Gentlemen, I wish you both good evening."

Self Possessed.

It was late and getting later.

However, that did not stop the sound of muffled voices in the parlor.

Meantime the gas meter worked steadily.

The pater endured it as long as he could and then resolved on heroic measures.

"Phyllis," he called from the head of the stairs, "has the morning paper come yet?"

"No, sir," replied the funny man on The Daily Bugle. "We are holding the form for an important decision."

And the pater went back to bed, wondering if they would keep house or live with him.—Colorado Springs Gazette.

A Clam That Pearl Divers Fear.

All sorts of superstitions prevail among the pearl fishers of Ceylon, and a large business is done by sorcerers who sell charms to restrain the appetite of the sharks and to drive away the diabolical stingrays. Another peril which the diver dreads more than either stingray or shark is the giant clam, that weighs nearly half a ton when full grown. It will snap off a man's legs like a pipestem if the victim chances to thrust a limb between its open jaws, or at all events will hold him until he drowns miserably.

Stamped Them.

She stamped her feet in pretty rage.

"Ha, ha!" sneered the heavy villain. "You'll have to pay excess postage on them. You had as well stamp them some more."

True, her feet were not the kind that made Cinderella famous, but was it real chivalry in him to say such things?—Baltimore American.

One Well Paid Bank Clerk.

"I tell you, bank clerks are not sufficiently remunerated," exclaimed the broker quite forcibly.

"Oh, I don't know," said the bank president, with a sad smile. "Our last receiving teller got about $20,000 a year for six years."—Brooklyn Life.

Only one city in Sweden would be classed with our larger cities—Stockholm, which is somewhat smaller than Pittsburg. Gothenberg is about as large as Columbus, O., but the other cities are little more than towns.

Recipes For Happiness.

Happiness is not to be procured like hard bake in a solid lump. It is composed of innumerable small items. The recipes for its acquisition are simple, and therefore we ignore them. Love in marriage, fidelity in friendship, affection between parent and children, courtesy in intercourse, devotion to duty and perfect sincerity in every relation of life—those are the ingredients of a happy life. In the quest for happiness one could not do better than put into practice the precepts of the great Persian: "Taking the first step with the good thought, the second step with the good word and the third step with the good deed, I entered paradise."—Sarah Grand.

The Fisherman's Gamble With Death

In bad weather, the fisherman's wife said, when the boats were out, she could never stay in the house because of the clock. As it ticked she heard nothing but "Wife, widow; wife, widow," over and over again. And, she said, 'tis but the swing of the bob which name should be the true one.—"Cynthia In the West."

Making Steel Rails.

The rail mill presents many pictures that appeal strongly to lovers of the picturesque. Under ordinary circumstances the great strands of iron, each half as long as a city block, slide back and forth smoothly enough between the rolls that are stretching them and pressing them into the required shape, but a tiny obstacle may at any moment turn one of these cables of fire off the beaten track and twist it into a hopeless tangle or wind it like a squirming snake around some unfortunate workman.

When the rolling process has been completed, the piece of iron slides along to the great buzzsaws, which cut it up into the 30 foot rails known to the railway traveler. Every time the whirring circular saw clips off one of these lengths, sparks radiate in every direction, as though the biggest pyrotechnical pinwheel ever devised had been suddenly set in motion.

When the rail has been cooled and holes have been drilled in it, it is ready to start for any part of the world. The evolution of bars or beams or sheets from the big steel slabs is gained by the same general method of procedure. It is the size and shape of the grooves in the rolls which determine the form to be ultimately assumed by the steel in their clutches.—Century Magazine.

Absolute Zero.

By "absolute zero" is meant the lowest temperature compatible with heat—that point of temperature, in fact, at which a body would be wholly deprived of heat and at which the particles whose motion constitutes heat would be at rest. This temperature is supposed to be about 274 degrees C. or 461 degrees F.

The term "heat" is here used in its scientific sense, for as men use the word in everyday language its significance depends on the temperature of the human body. Men call "warm" everything with a temperature higher than their own and "cold" all those objects which have less heat than they. In reality, however, the coldest body known to man is far from being utterly without heat. Ice, for example, has heat, only in a degree so much below man's temperature that one can scarcely imagine it to be anything but "cold," a term which actually implies a comparatively low degree of heat.

Accordingly the zero of thermometers is only a conventional point marking a certain degree of heat. There seems to be a point, however, where heat ceases absolutely, and this point it is which is known in chemistry as the "absolute zero."

Modern Man's Great Appetite.

Custom seems to have decreed that three "square" meals a day should be the allowance for the citizen of the United States and Canada, and it was looked upon as being as fixed as the laws of the Medes and Persians, but an up town restaurant man states that a great number of New Yorkers are no longer satisfied with the regulation three meals a day. Four meals are now asked for, breakfast, lunch, dinner and supper. The last is no doubt superfluous for those who can and do make three hearty meals of the others, but there must be many who will learn with pleasure that it is no longer incumbent upon them to go "supperless to their bed." The idea that indigestion may be caused by the introduction of the fourth meal is absurd.—Scottish American.

A Floral Inscription.

At one time I was pastor of a village where there was a German undertaker who was always anxious to please. Because of his zeal in this direction and his habit of so often getting things backward he was the butt of a good many jokes and furnished others many a hearty laugh. One day a customer of his asked him to telegraph the florist in a nearby city to send a floral design representing "Gates Ajar." He hurried to the phone and, calling up the florist, said he wished a floral design. The florist asked what kind. He was puzzled, but not defeated, and after some delay said: "Oh, yes; now I got him! Heaven wide open; that's what they want!"—Homiletic Review.

Make a Banana Peel Itself.

A trick which works on a simple principle is to make a banana peel itself. To do this all that is wanted is a bottle, a ripe banana and a bit of paper wet with alcohol. Light the paper and drop it into this bottle. When the air in the bottle is well heated, set the banana on end on top and let it do the rest itself. As the air on the inside cools off and contracts the outside pressure pushes the banana down into the bottle until it has drawn itself out of its skin.

Cries of Animals.

The roar of a lion can be heard farther than the sound of any other living creature. Next comes the cry of a hyena, and then the hoot of the owl. After these the panther and the jackal. The donkey can be heard 50 times farther than the horse and the cat ten times farther than the dog. Strange as it may seem, the cry of a hare can be heard farther than that of either the cat or the dog.

When the Atlantic Was Bridged.

According to the distinguished French anthropologists Gabriel and Adrien de Mortillet there was a junction between Europe and America by way of the British isles, the Faroes, Iceland and Greenland, in what is known as the Chellean epoch, which is supposed to have ended 150,000 or 160,000 years ago.—Baltimore Sun.

Replaced Them.

Mistress—Why, Bridget, what on earth are you doing with all the broken dishes on the shelf?

Bridget—Sure, mum, yez towld me Oi wur to replace every one Oi broke.

The Promenade Stopped.

It is related of Captain Deering that once when he was in command of a steamer running from Portland to St. John, he was unable to sleep on account of the ceaseless tramp, tramp of some star gazing passenger on the hurricane deck overhead. After turning and twisting in his berth for half an hour, and the tramping still continuing, Captain Deering, enraged at the loss of his sleep, rushed out in his nightshirt and climbed the ladder to the hurricane deck.

The promenading passenger was frightened half out of his wits by the specter in white climbing up the ladder, but was somewhat reassured when the specter bawled out:

"Say, you; where are you going?"

"To St. John," replied the promenader.

"Got a ticket?" pursued the ghost.

"Of course I have."

"Well, then, you confounded fool, go and lie down somewhere—you needn't walk all the way to St. John," roared the enraged Deering, and the promenader stopped right there.—Baltimore Herald.

An Anecdote of Gen. Jackson.

General Jackson, while on one of his journeys to Tennessee about the time of the nullification excitement, arrived at a Virginian village in a very impatient state of mind, both with public affairs and with the state of the roads. The president was entertained as a guest at the house of a lady in the village, and, although he tried to be polite, the state of vexation which he was in affected him visibly.

His hostess, at the supper table, was much alarmed to see the general swallowing with great rapidity a cup of almost boiling hot tea.

"Wait—wait, general!" exclaimed the lady; "let me give you some cold water."

"No, thank you, ma'am," said the general, continuing to drink.

"But I don't see how you can drink that boiling hot tea without scalding yourself."

"No wonder you can't, ma'am," said Jackson. "I am scalding myself."

"But, sir, why do you"—

"Good gracious, ma'am!" exclaimed the general, "don't you see that I want to scald myself?"

The lady refrained from making any further suggestions as to her distinguished guest's comfort.

If You Could Look into the future and see the condition to which your cough, if neglected, will bring you, you would seek relief at once—and that naturally would be through

Just the Same.

Augustus Ha[illegible] tells this story in his autobiography of a friend who in some ways was one of the most absentminded men in the world:

One day, meeting a friend, he said: "Hello, what a long time it is since I've seen you! How's your father?" "Oh, my father's dead." "God bless me! I'm very sorry."

The next year he met the same man again and had forgotten all about it, so began with: "Hello, what a long time since I've seen you! How's your father?" "Oh, my father's dead still."

The Noise Habit.

The New Yorker contracts in time what may be called the noise habit. Noise with him becomes a dissipation. His nervous system demands it. This is illustrated by the sensations he experiences when he goes into the woods or mountains after a continuous stay in the city for many months. His first feeling is one of loneliness; something seems to have suddenly gone out of his life. Every tree seems to say, "Why have you been so hot and noisy, my little sir?" His sensations are somewhat akin to those of a drunkard who has been under alcoholic stimulation for a long time and suddenly has his drink taken from him. His whole nervous system feels the lack of the irritation and stimulation of the city noise, to which it has become accustomed. The stillness actually appals and depresses him.

The streets of New York are deep, narrow channels, and they are growing constantly deeper as the buildings increase in height. These large reflecting surfaces on three sides of him make the condition of the man in the street like that of the workman who suffers from reflected noise while he hammers rivets on the inside of a boiler.—Munsey's Magazine.

Four and Its Multiple of Ten.

The number four was anciently esteemed the most perfect of all, being the arithmetical mean between one and seven. Omah, the second caliph, said, "Four things come not back—the spoken word, the sped arrow, the past life, the neglected opportunity." In nature there are four seasons, and the four points of the compass.

Forty, a multiple of four by ten, is one of the sacred numbers. The probation of our first parents in the garden of Eden is supposed to have been 40 years. The rain fell at the deluge 40 days and nights, and the water remained on the earth 40 days. The days of embalming the dead were 40. Solomon's temple was 40 cubits long. In it were ten lavers, each four cubits long and containing 40 baths.

Moses was 40 years old when he fled into the land of Midian, where he dwelt 40 years. He was on Mount Sinai 40 days and 40 nights. The Israelites wandered in the wilderness 40 years. The Saviour fasted 40 days and nights before entering upon public life. The same time elapsed between the resurrection and the ascension.

"What are you doing, Freddie?" said the painfully smart boy's uncle.

An Observer.

A correspondent writes: "I was visiting a friend some time ago and naturally in due time wished to take a bath. So, having let a goodly supply of water into the tub, in I stepped, with much pleasure at the prospect of a delightful scrub, when a most matter of fact voice said, 'Going to take a bath?' My heart stood still with terror, and, vainly endeavoring to stretch my washrag to the dimensions of a sheet, I glared wildly around and saw a parrot placidly blinking at me from his cage in the window."—New York Tribune.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Get Green's Prize Almanac at J. J. Orr's.

METEOR LAUNCHED

Miss Alice Roosevelt Christens and Releases Her.

THOUSANDS WERE WITNESSES

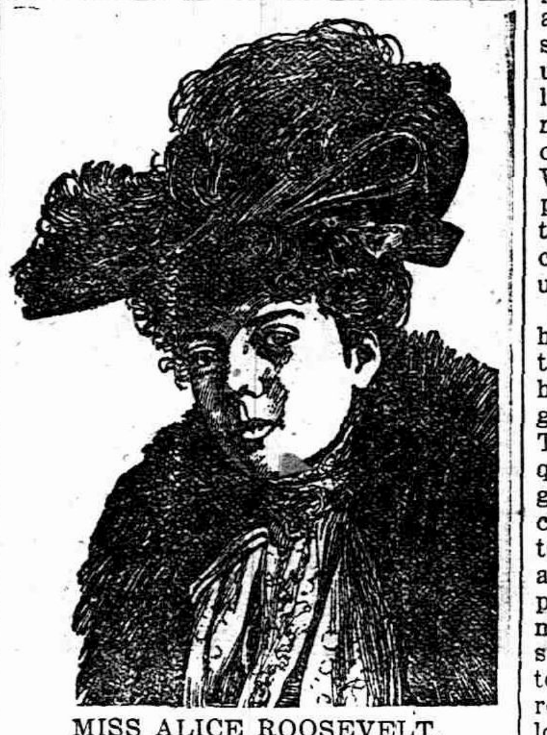
Took Place in the Presence of President Roosevelt, Prince Henry and Many Notables—A Drizzling Rain the Only Bad Feature.

New York, Feb. 26.—The all-important event in the itinerary of Prince Henry of Prussia Tuesday was the launching of the schooner yacht Meteor, built at Shooters island for the prince's brother, the German emperor. The christening ceremony was performed by Miss Alice Roosevelt, daughter of the president of the United States, in the presence of the president, the prince, German ambassador Von Hollenben, and a brilliant assemblage.

The special train bearing President Roosevelt from Washington to the launching reached Jersey City at 6:40 a. m. The president remained on board until the arrival of the prince's train, a few moments after 8 o'clock. Soon after 8 o'clock the president and the prince and their suites embarked on a boat for Shooters island. The president and prince, with Mrs. and Miss Roosevelt, arrived on the launching platform at 10:22. The prince conducted Miss Roosevelt to the small platform immediately under the bow of the boat.

In a drizzling rain, amid the roar of cannon, great cheering and waving of flags the Meteor was launched.

Precisely at 10:39 Miss Roosevelt raised the bottle of champagne, which had been encased in beautiful silver filigree and which was suspended by a 35-foot chain. Dashing the bottle against the side of the vessel with vigorous and effective hand, the wine breaking into spray, Miss Roosevelt said in English: "In the name of the German emperor, I christen thee Meteor." Her voice was loud and clear and could be distinctly heard on all the surrounding platform. Then she raised a silver ax and severed the rope holding the weight which kept the ship in the ways, and the vessel went gracefully into the water.



MISS ALICE ROOSEVELT,
Daughter of the President, Who Christened Emperor William's Yacht "Meteor" on Tuesday.

Simultaneously cannon boomed and the noise of the gun was lost in that resulting from the roar of human voices, aided by the royal German band, the Naval Militia band and several bands on board the various vessels surrounding the island where occupants were not privileged to land. Every hat was raised and then there was cheer after cheer for the president, the prince and Miss Roosevelt.

The prince immediately after the launching sent the following cablegram in German:

"To the German emperor, Berlin: Yacht just launched under brilliant auspices. Christened by Miss Roosevelt's hand. Beautiful craft. Great enthusiasm. I congratulate you with all my heart. HEINRICH."

After the launching the president, with Mrs. and Miss Roosevelt, were the guests of the prince on board the royal yacht Hohenzollern, the president and his wife leaving for Washington in the afternoon. Miss Alice Roosevelt remained in New York with friends.

The feature of the afternoon was the presentation of the freedom of the city of Greater New York to Prince Henry. The ceremony which took place in the city hall was short, and the prince, in response to the mayor's address, gave pleasant expression to the desire for continued and increasing friendship between the two countries while he made graceful acknowledgment of the unusual welcome accorded him.

Notwithstanding the rain, it is estimated that fully 100,000 people waited outside the city hall until the prince appeared after the ceremony, and here, as well as along the route afterwards taken by the carriages, the royal visitor was accorded an ovation by the people of New York. In the evening Prince Henry, his suite and the presidential delegates were the guests of the mayor of New York at dinner at the Manhattan club, and the day was brought to a close with a wonderful performance at the Metropolitan opera house.

Washington, Feb. 26.—The National Legislative league, in conference here, has adopted resolutions urging legislation to secure to all native-born persons, "without regard to sex," protection in American citizenship and protesting against the elimination of citizenship of women who marry foreigners, and advocating trial of women accused of crime by juries composed wholly or in part of their own sex.

THE FIRST MESSAGE

Received From Miss Stone by Her Brother.

TELLS OF THE RELEASE

Boston, Feb. 26.—The first message from Miss Ellen M. Stone, the missionary, to her family and friends was received Tuesday night by her brother, Mr. Charles A. Stone of Chelsea. The cablegram told of her release by the brigands and her warm welcome by Bulgarian friends in the village of Strumitza. Prior to the receipt of this message Mr. Stone received a dispatch from Salonica from M. Gargiulo, first dragoman of the American legation, as follows:

"Liberated Saturday night village Gradishar, near Strumitza, where village mayor led them 9 o'clock Sunday. Coming to Salonica tonight with House."

Then came the long-looked-for message from the absent daughter and sister. It read as follows:

"Ristovatz, Feb. 25, 1902.

"Charles A. Stone, Chelsea, Mass.:

"Freed, thank God, and well after our captivity of nearly six months. Yesterday, Sabbath morning, Mrs. Tsilka and her seven-weeks-old daughter Eleana and I found ourselves left by our abductors near a village an hour distant from Strumitza. For three hours we waited for dawn, then secured horses and came to this city. Kind-hearted Bulgarian friends rushed from their house as soon as they caught a glimpse of the strange appearing travelers, took us in their arms from our horses, with tears and smiles and words of welcome, and led us into their house. Word was quickly sent to the friends engaged in their morning service at church, and they came, old and young, to greet us. What thanksgiving to God for this proof of His faithfulness to answer their prayers, for all, even the little children, had never ceased to pray for us, their lost friends.

"Since that hour our waking time has been crowded with friends from the city and surrounding villages, who have brought us their heartfelt congratulations for our deliverance. The Turkish government did not fail to question us as to our experiences. The governor of the city, with his suite, called this morning and again this afternoon, after the arrival of Dr. House and his son from Salonica, accompanied by M. Gargiulo, the first dragoman of the American embassy at Constantinople. The last three have come to accompany us to Salonica tomorrow, where Mr. Tsilka awaits his long-lost wife and their baby. They have brought me a bundle of letters from mother and my brothers and dearest friends. Thus, with unspeakable gratitude to God and to all friends who by prayers and gifts have helped to free us, we begin our life of freedom.

"Your sister,

"ELLEN M. STONE."

SUMPTUOUS BANQUET.

Given Prince Henry in New York Yesterday.

New York, Feb. 27.—A luncheon was given in honor of Prince Henry of Prussia by twelve New York gentlemen and a German government official to about 100 Americans from all parts of the United States at Sherry's Wednesday. It was in some respects the most notable function of its kind ever held in this city. There were 137 persons seated at the 11 tables.

The prince dined last night with 1,000 of the men who make American newspapers. He was the special guest of Herman Ridder, proprietor of the New Yorker Staats Zeitung, who gathered at his table a majority of the leading figures in American journalism. They came from the four quarters of the country and made the most noteworthy gathering of their profession ever assembled in the United States. There was a felicitous exchange of greetings between Prince Henry and the men who spoke for the journalistic craft, and the affair claims rank as one of the notable incidents of the American tour of the German prince.

The dinner was given in the handsome ball room of the Waldorf-Astoria hotel. In a short speech to the assembly the prince, in part, said:

"Mr. Toastmaster and Gentlemen: I am fully aware of the fact that I am the guest and in the presence of the representatives of the press of the United States, and in particular the guest of the New York Staats Zeitung, but of which I wish to thank for the kind invitation and reception I have met with tonight.

"It will interest you, I know, to learn something about the nature of my mission to this country. The facts are as follows: His majesty, the emperor, has minutely studied the recent and rapid development of the United States, and his majesty is well aware of the fact that yours is a fast-moving nation. His sending me to this country may, therefore, be looked upon as an act of friendship and courtesy, with the one desire of promoting friendlier relations between Germany and the United States. Should you be willing to grasp a proffered hand, you will find one on the other side of the Atlantic ocean."

BANK HAD A RUN

Detroit People Took Alarm—Rushed for Their Money.

WITH NO APPARENT CAUSE

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 25.—Without warning and without any apparent cause, people began crowding around the doors of the Jefferson avenue branch of the Dime Savings bank Monday morning. As the bank was in excellent condition, little was thought of the matter, and it was expected that the run would soon subside.

The crowds, however, evidently attracted others, who, not waiting to hear any plausible reason, became excited, got their bank books, and pushed into line.

It was not until afternoon that the excitement spread to the main branch of the bank at Fort and Griswold streets. All morning there had been a goodly number of depositors coming in and drawing out their funds. Shortly after 2 o'clock, however, the lines began forming and at 2:45 o'clock there were about 75 depositors inside the bank and 150 waiting to get in.

The news of the run spread rapidly through the city and at 3 o'clock several hundred persons were surging in from Fort street at the main office and vainly trying to elbow their neighbors from their positions.

As the news spread the crowd increased in size, and at 5 o'clock at least 2,000 people were in the vicinity of the bank, of whom probably 700 were depositors waiting in line for their turn at the window, the balance being people drawn to the scene by curiosity. A large force of detectives and patrolmen were on hand, and the crowd was kept moving as much as possible. After 5 o'clock the excitement subsided to a great extent, and the crowd slowly diminished.

One cause given for the run on the Jefferson avenue branch was a rumor that the bank had been robbed. This arose from the fact that the building is undergoing some alterations and part of one wall had been torn away.

The tellers were kept busy handing out the cash until 6:30 o'clock. From the time the run started, until the last payment was made at 6:30, the Dime Savings bank paid out at the main bank about $85,000. Cashier Warren went out to the Jefferson avenue branch and honored accounts until 5:30 o'clock, and a teller did the same thing at the Woodward avenue branch, until there had been paid out at these two branches $25,000, bringing the total disbursements up to $110,000.

REACH AN UNDERSTANDING.

Houses Agree to Bill to Create Permanent Census Bureau.

Washington, Feb. 27.—The conferees of the two houses of congress on the bill creating a permanent census bureau reached an agreement Wednesday. The bill as agreed upon embodies most of the amendments made in the senate, though some of them are retained in modified form. The senate provision concerning the civil service is retained. All the employes of the office at the time of the signing of the bill, except unskilled laborers, are to come under the provisions of the civil service law. The provision requiring future appointments to be made under the civil service law was modified by the conference so as to make the requirement applicable only to permanent appointments. The director's salary is fixed at $6,000 per annum, instead of $5,000, as suggested by the house, and $7,000 as named by the senate. The senate provision for an assistant director is stricken out and a provision is inserted requiring the chief clerk to act as director in the absence of that official. The chief clerk's salary is fixed at $2,500. The clause limiting the director's appointment to four years' time is eliminated. Four chief statisticians and four chiefs of divisions are provided for. The senate amendment providing that the collection of statistics concerning such special classes as the feeble-minded and the blind shall occur decennially is retained.

CRAZY SNAKE IN PRISON.

He and Nine of His Followers Get Two Years.

Muskogee, I. T., Feb. 27.—Chitto Hargo, or Crazy Snake, and nine of his followers have been sentenced to the United States penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., for two years, and each was fined $5,000 on a charge of conspiring against the government.

They constitute the leaders of what is known as the Snake gang of Indians, who have sought to resist the allotment of lands by the Dawes commission in the Creek nation, and prevent the settlement of affairs by the government in the Indian Territory. Crazy Snake, more than a year ago, started an uprising that made it necessary to call out troops from Sill, and he and his followers were arrested last week for again inciting the Indians to violence.

Sent Tariff Bill to Conference.

Washington, Feb. 27.—The house Wednesday sent the Philippine tariff bill to conference, non-concurring in all the senate amendments. The democrats sought to amend the amendments by reducing the rate of duty and declaring the United States should relinquish all claim to the archipelago, but all propositions were defeated.

Mr. Tawney (Minn.) made a personal explanation regarding Gov. Toole of Montana, saying that in formerly classing the governor as an opponent of Gov. Van Sant in the railroad merger, he had been under a misapprehension.

MINOR TELEGRAMS.

The steamer Naiad was burned at Blountstown Ga., Wednesday. No lives were lost.

The Illinois democratic delegation in the house have selected George P. Foster of Chicago as the Illinois member of the democratic national congressional committee.

The Standard Oil Co. has voluntarily increased the wages of 500 employes in Ohio and Indiana 10 per cent. Those whose salaries were increased last year do not share in the present advance.

GUILTY OF BRIBERY

Is Verdict Brought Against Harry Taylor.

HE MAY GO TO PRISON

He Furnished the Boodle for Salsbury to Bribe Grand Rapids City Officials—McGarry and Albers Are Now Booked for Trial.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 27.—H. A. Taylor, the young New York and Connecticut capitalist, who came here in the summer of 1900 to boodle a million-dollar water deal through the council, with the assistance of City Attorney Salsbury and Thomas F. McGarry, has been convicted in the superior court of bribery and conspiracy, the jury returning last night with a verdict of guilty as charged, after deliberating 32 hours.

When the verdict was announced, Taylor's face was white and drawn, and for the first time he seemed to realize his real position. There was no scene, however, and defense seemed so demoralized that Taylor's lawyers did not even demand a poll of the jury. The court adjourned until today, when it is expected that a motion will be made for a continuance to permit an appeal.

Taylor was the capitalist back of Garman and Cameron, who promoted the deal and furnished the $100,000 boodle fund which Salsbury received.

It is figured that the enterprise as a whole has cost him upwards of $150,000, with the prospect of a prison term now added.

Of those indicted by the grand jury, Thomas F. McGarry and Gerrit H. Albers have not yet been tried. McGarry has been ill for the past month, but the case against him will be called at the next term of court, and Albers's will probably follow.

Salsbury was convicted and he is out on bail, pending an appeal to the supreme court, with a case against him for an alleged fraudulent transaction in a national bank deal, to be called for trial in the United States court in the March term.

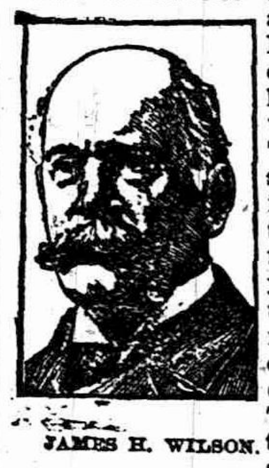
ALL COUNTIES REPRESENTED.

Farmers' Round-Up at M. A. C. a Grand Success.

Agricultural College, Mich., Feb. 27.—Wednesday was the climax of the big state round-up institute and farmers from almost every county of Michigan were in attendance on the sessions.

The work of the morning was divided into several sections. Classes in cooking and sewing were held in the laboratory of the women's building. Practical demonstrations were given by the instructors in that department and a lecture given by Miss Crowe.

Those interested in the live stock and horticulture lines gathered in the agricultural and horticultural laboratories, respectively. At the former Prof. J. J. Ferguson gave a practical lesson in the judging of beef and dairy cattle. The various types of animals were shown and their excellency and faults discussed. In the horticultural meeting Prof. U. P. Hedrich lectured upon the "Practice and theory of pruning," after which a discussion was led by Hon. Charles W. Garfield of



JAMES H. WILSON.

The conference of county officers and delegates was held in the college chapel. Very nearly every county was represented. The time was spent in discussing and planing the one-day institute work for next year. The work the past year has never been equaled, either in interest or attendance. There is great enthusiasm over this success, both at headquarters and among institute officers and workers in the various counties, and great effort will be made to attain even a greater success next year.

The general session was held in the armory and was presided over by Hon. E. P. Allen of Ypsilanti, member of the state board of agriculture. Hon. Gifford Pinchot, chief of the division of forestry, Washington, D. C., who was to give the address, was unable to be present, and George B. Sudworth, chief of the division of forestry investigation, spoke in his place.

Mr. Sudworth spoke upon "The condition and significance of the forestry movement."

At 2 o'clock the afternoon session opened, with A. B. Cook in the chair. The first number was by George B. Horton, master of the State Grange, whose subject was "The needs and possibilities of organization among farmers."

Mr. Horton was followed by Graham Taylor of Chicago on the subject, "The church as a center of rural organizations." He spoke at length upon the need for the rural church and its influence among the ranks of the farmers.

The Political Science association held their annual business meeting at the beginning of the afternoon session. Officers for next year were elected as follows: President, Hon. Arthur Hill, Saginaw; regent of the university; first vice-president, W. M. Burke, Albion; second vice-president, James H. McDonald, Detroit; third vice-president, Howard Edwards, Lansing; secretary, H. C. Adams, Ann Arbor; treasurer, C. H. Cooley, Ann Arbor; members of executive committee, E. D. Jones, Ann Arbor; John Widdecomb, Grand Rapids, and J. J. Hanshire, Lansing.

The evening session was remarkable for the presence of Secretary of Agricultural Wilson, who took in the college, of which he was an honored guest, during the day.

A Legacy of the Grip

Is often a run-down system. Weakness, nervousness, lack of appetite, energy and ambition, with disordered liver and kidneys often follow an attack of this wretched disease. The greatest need then is Electric Bitters, the splendid tonic, blood purifier and regulator of stomach, liver and kidneys. Thousands have proved that they wonderfully strengthen the nerves, build up the system, and restore to health and good spirits after an attack of grip. If suffering, try them. Only 50c. Sure Cure for Smallpox.

The following recipe was given to the HERALD by Dr. E. D. Brown. He claims he has not tried it for smallpox but thinks it must be a good thing.

As there is so much smallpox in all parts of this continent, and as the disease may break out in this community some time, the following may be of some benefit: Edward Hine in a communication to the Liverpool Mercury speaks as follows: "I am willing to risk my reputation as a public man if the worst case of smallpox cannot be cured in three days simply by cream of tartar. This is a sure and never failing remedy. 1 ounce of cream of tartar dissolved in 1 pint of boiling water to be drunk when cold at short intervals. It can be taken at any time, and is a preventative as well as a curative. It is known to have cured in a hundred thousand cases without a single failure. I have myself restored hundreds by this means alone. It never leaves a mark, never causes blindness and always prevents tedious lingering."

LUKE DOLLIVER'S TEMPTATION...

By ANNIE H. DONNELL

Copyright, 1901, by Annie H. Donnell.

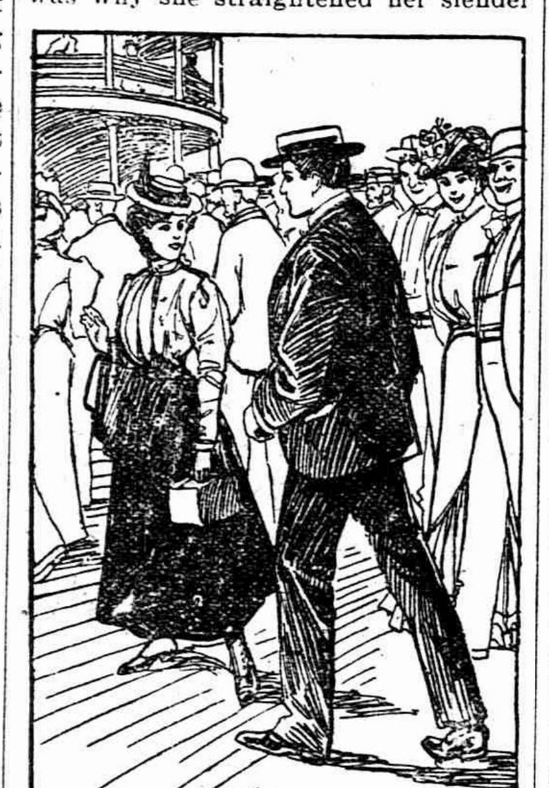
No one had held an umbrella over her for so long! She glanced up in amazement, bordering on fright. He was so tall.

"You're such a little mite of a woman, an' it's rainin' pitchforks!" the man said cheerily.

"I didn't have any umbrella handy," she said shyly. The last word was appended to shield her poverty, but her cotton gloves and shiny seamed jacket gave it the lie.

"Umbrellas are slippery things, wet or dry," said the man encouragingly. "When you want 'em, they ain't there!"

It was a wind driven rain, and he lowered the umbrella on her side to ward off the great slanting drops. She felt a novel sensation of being sheltered, and a sob rose in her throat. Once she slipped, and he caught her arm. She had slipped so many times before, but no one had tried to save her. That was why she straightened her slender figure to its utmost and swung along beside him importantly. She thought passersby must look at her with respect.



SHE HAD NEVER CALLED HIM LUKE BEFORE.

One wet block and half of another they traversed before either spoke again. Then it was the man.

"I'd ought to introduce myself, I guess," he said awkwardly. "I'm Luke Dolliver."

"I'm Faith Pettie," was the response.

"Faith. That's a nice soundin' name," he murmured.

Faith looked shyly.

"I've always thought it dreadfully old fashioned, but I didn't mind because it was grandmother's name."

"Then you've got folks, eh? Why, I shouldn't know how that felt."

"I did have. I haven't any now. There aren't any left."

The catch in her low voice seemed to trouble Luke. He changed the topic.

"What d'you say your last name was, eh?"

"Pettie—Faith Pettie," she answered.

He was looking down kindly into her small, pale, but rather sweet face.

"H'm! I reckon they forgot to put the 'r' in it."

"What 'r'?" Her puzzled innocence made him laugh in a big, healthy way. Faith laughed, too, involuntarily. They were passing a long row of tenements that toed the pavement in dreamy succession. Faith stopped before one midway in the row.

"This ain't your home, is it?" the big man asked, eying the structure with evident disfavor.

"No; it's where I stop," Faith answered quietly, conscious that she blushed under his frank gaze. It was a graceless house, and she wished that her room was in front, so he could see the pot of red geraniums and the white curtain which helped out some.

At the front door they both stopped, and Faith looked up at him shyly.

"I'm ever so much obliged, Mr.—Mr."—

"Dolliver, Dolliver; but you just say 'Luke.' I work down at Weymouth's factory. Everybody calls me Luke."

He held the umbrella above her carefully till she mounted the steps and stood in the slit of a doorway. Then he closed it promptly.

"Well, I declare if it ain't stopped rainin'!" he cried. "Now, when did that happen?"

In the spring twilights which followed, these two workers met, at first as if by chance and then as if by mutual attraction. They loitered on their way home from work, and the girl grew less lonely, while the man came to count on throwing aside his troubles for the short time they walked together. Moreover, he became ambitious to make her smile in return. The rare occasions when he suggested that they pass beyond the tenement and sit on the benches in the promenade and watch the sunset on the water Faith marked as red letter days on her calendar.

It did not occur to honest, big Luke Dolliver that danger lurked in these quiet moments. The mite of a woman who sat beside him looked happy—he liked to make her quiet face brighten. Nor did it occur to Faith that she loved him—she was simply content when he graduated his great pace to hers or talked quietly to her on the promenade. She told him frankly of her early country life, the death of the folks and her efforts to earn her livelihood in the great city, but Luke Dolliver never spoke of his past. Her life if colorless, was enviable as compared to his.

Spring crept into summer before they knew it, and they began to watch the gay boat parties from the promenade.

"I never was out on the water in my life," Faith said idly one evening. "And I never really 'holidayed.' I don't call days off 'holidaying,' do you?"

"My fix, too," answered Luke. "Days off ain't the right kind. We'd ought to try our hand at the genuine article, eh?"

Faith's face kindled with gentle excitement.

"There's going to be an excursion down the river next Saturday. I heard the girls talking about it at noon. They're going. There's to be a band too"—

"Then you an' me'll go, mite of a one." There had been a slight hesitation, but he could not disappoint the childish eagerness in her pale face. The delight in Faith's eyes repaid him for the invitation and they sat later than usual that evening making their plans.

Three days till Saturday! Faith lived in a quiver of anticipation. She sat up late each night furbishing her clothes, even to the ribbons on her sailor hat, which really looked better when they were turned.

Saturday's skies could not have been bluer or the air cooler and sweeter. Faith met the day with such a radiant face that Luke Dolliver regarded her with astonished satisfaction. He had never noticed before how blue her eyes were in their white setting nor how the elusive dimples played at hide and seek in her small round chin.

"You little mite of a one," he cried gleefully, "what you been doin' to yourself? I'd ought to have put on my white duck trousers an' boiled shirt!"

For reply Faith stood on tiptoe and pinned a tiny bunch of pinks on the lapel of his coarse brown coat. Her fingers shook with excitement, and an expression of pain contracted Luke Dolliver's face. He looked about him uneasily. Yes, he would leave her—there among the pleasure seekers. He could make some excuse. She would not mind, and he'd leave the ticket and go and never come back.

These thoughts tormented Luke as they went on—the sudden consciousness that he was wronging the girl in sharing the day's pleasure with her. He had meant it to be only a bright spot in her dull life. Now he suddenly recalled the barrier that separated him worldwide from Faith.

The stream of people bound for the wharf thickened. A showily dressed woman between two men stared at them and openly jeered. She nudged her companion, and the three burst into loud laughter.

"Hold on, little mite of a one. Don't hurry so," Luke muttered, shutting an oath behind his teeth. "There's a-plenty of time." He could not bear to have Faith see the impudent, handsome face. He had not seen it himself for many a day.

"No, no; we must hurry! Oh, Luke, if we should be late!" cried Faith anxiously.

She had never called him Luke before. His half formed purpose to turn back vanished.

"Lord have mercy, I love the little mite of a one!" groaned the man in his heart.

Hours later on the homeward trip he discovered that Faith loved him. They were sitting alone in a corner of the deck, and he read it clearly in her pure upturned face. To draw her close and hold her so forever! How easy a thing it would be! And what did all the rest of the world matter?

He saw how thin her arm was where the lace fell away, the peak of her chin and the hollows in her temples. How frail and slight she was to earn her bread alone! The thought set his pulses beating mutinously.

"Lord have mercy! Lord have mercy!" his soul prayed for him.

The steamer neared its landing place, and the shrill voiced throng crowded toward the gangplank. The man and girl were in a zone of silence. He was eying the shore line, creeping nearer and nearer, with his lips set to grim lines. He was fighting a sharp battle. He had given himself till the steamer touched shore to reach a decision.

The ribbon of blue water narrowed. Now it was a thread.

"Who's going to wait? Here, boys, take hold of hands—Now, one, two, three—jump!"

Luke Dolliver recognized the gay, reckless voice. It had made the discord of his whole life. Should he let it—

A cry of horror and a woman's shriek of pain rose simultaneously. Faith started to her feet, white and shaking.

"Oh, Luke, what is it?" she cried.

He pushed her back on the seat firmly.

"It ain't anything much. You set right here an' wait for me."

He plowed his way to the boat's edge and took one look at the three crushed bodies. The woman's bold, handsome face was turned upward and the refining touch of death lay on it.

A little later Luke went back to Faith, and his face, softened and grave, was the face of a free man. Yet if only he were sure he had decided that question before the accident happened! Yet could he have decided it wrongly?

"You poor little mite of a one," he cried tenderly, "you look scared to death! It's all over. Three people got hurt, but they're—better now." She was clinging nervously to his strong arm, and her teeth chattered. He stooped and kissed her gently. "You little mite of a one," he cried. "You ain't any bigger'n a baby. I'm going to take care of you the rest of your life!"

Some Evidence.

Gobang—Well, he has a steely eye and a wiry beard.

Coincidences of Dates.

Attention has often been called to the curious fact of the date Sept. 3 figuring so largely in the history of Oliver Cromwell. That very dominating man was born on Sept. 3, 1599; he won the battle of Dunbar Sept. 3, 1650; that of Worcester Sept. 3, 1651, and he died Sept. 3, 1658. But we have lately come across some coincidences of dates which, so far as we know, have not been noticed before. The number 88 seems to have had fatal influence on the Stuarts. Robert II., the first Stuart king, died in 1388; James II. was killed at the siege of Roxburghe Castle, 1488; Mary, queen of Scots, was beheaded in Fotheringay, 1588 (new style); James VII. (II. of England) was dethroned in 1688; Bonny Prince Charlie died in Rome, 1788, and with him died the last hopes of the Jacobites.

Feline Depravity.

"Oh, Horace," wailed his young wife, "I have just found out that Ajax, our beautiful Angora cat, has been leading a double life!"

"That makes eighteen, I suppose," said Horace. "What has he been doing?"

"You know I let him out every morning, because he seems to want to go and play out of doors. Well, I have discovered that he goes over to the Robinsons and lets them feed him and pet him."—Chicago Tribune.

The Betel Nut.

Betel nuts, the produce of the areca palm, are chiefly used as a masticatory by the natives of the east. They are too small to be applied to many ornamental uses, but are occasionally employed by the turner and wrought into beads for bracelets, small rosary cases and other little fancy articles. In the Museum of Economic Botany at Kew there is a walking stick made of these nuts, sliced, mounted or supported on an iron center.

A Zoo Discussion.

"You know," said the orang outang, "that man is descended from a monkey."

"Yes," answered the chimpanzee, "and his descent has been very great. But let us set it down to his credit that he tries to rise again. Every now and then you hear of some man who is doing his best to make a monkey of himself."—Washington Star.

Sarcasm That Failed.

A certain Englishman by birth who is an American by force of circumstances has been in this country long enough to absorb the American idea of humor. Last summer he was in London on a visit and happening to have business with a man on an upper floor of a tall building took the "lift" to reach his office. The elevator was one of those excessively deliberate British affairs, and its snail-like progress annoyed the Americanized Briton. The only other occupant of the car was a middle aged Englishman, with a manner of peculiarly English seriousness. The man from America ventured to address him.

"I think I could make a great improvement in this lift," he said.

The Englishman looked seriously interested.

"How?" he asked.

"Why," the other man went on, "I'd make it go faster by a simple little arrangement. I'd stop the lift altogether and move the building up and down."

The Englishman looked slightly more interested.

"How?" he asked.

Sponges.

Sponges grow in odd, fantastic shapes. Some of them have an overgrowth resembling huge warts. There are some suggesting hands, hats and figures of idols. These are curiosities and not marketable for practical use. In trimming them into shape many small sponges are made which are used for children's slates, for blacking shoes and in making paper. The uses vary according to size.

One of the largest sponges, known is in New York city. It is fan shape and some three feet in diameter. For practical use it is worthless, but as an exhibit it is valued at $100.

The best sponges are imported from the Mediterranean, although Florida produces very fine varieties. These vary in price from a cent to $20 apiece, although occasionally fine specimens bring $60 a pound. The best of these are used in surgical operations.

Other sponges are the mandruka batt, the elephant ear, velvet, grass and sheep's wool, which is best for washing. The cheap sponges are used in washing carriages and by painters.

A Curious Indian Custom.

In the original settlements in British Columbia a peculiar institution occasioned gala times for the red men now and then. This was the "potlatch," a thing to us so foreign, even in the impulse of which it is begotten, that we have no word or phrase to give its meaning. It is a feast and merrymaking at the expense of some man who has earned or saved what he deems considerable wealth, and who desires to distribute every iota of it at once in edibles and drinkables among the people of his tribe or village. He does this because he aspires to a chieftainship or merely for the credit of a "potlatch," a high distinction. Indians have been known to throw away such a sum of money that their "potlatch" has been given in a huge shed built for the feast, and blankets and ornaments have been distributed in addition to the feast.

Celt and Saxon.

One of Sheridan's tales was of an Irishman who met a Briton, of the true John Bull pattern, standing with folded arms in a contemplative mood, apparently meditating on the greatness of his little island.

"Allow me to differ with ye!" exclaimed the Celt.

"But I have said nothing, sir," replied John Bull.

"And a man may think a lie as well as publish it," persisted the pugnacious Hibernian.

"Perhaps you are looking for fight?" queried the Briton.

"Allow me to compliment ye on the quickness of yer perception," said Patrick, throwing down his coat, and then they pitched in.

A Table Decoration.

At a banquet given recently in Paris by a French countess the guests received a most astounding surprise. In the center of the table was what appeared to be a huge pile of roses, and just before soup was served the roses parted, disclosing a large birdcage. This suddenly opened, revealing a beautiful young lady adorned with wings. She remained in her strange position during the dinner and introduced each new dish by singing a couplet.

Had Looked Out For Number One.

"Have you ever done anything to better the condition of any part of the human race?" said the very serious man.

"Of course I have," answered the person with the cold gray eye. "Am I not a part of the human race?"—Exchange.

A Cynic on Marriage.

Sardines are a delicacy fit for any epicure, but the other fish was thus summed up by an epigrammatic Cornishman: "Pilchards," he said "are like wives. When they're bad, they're awful, and when they're good they're only middling."—Pall Mall Gazette.

African Rivers.

All the rivers of Africa have remarkable peculiarities. They seek the ocean that is farthest away from their source. Their course is always broken by falls, and their mouths are stopped by numerous sandbanks.

Crushed the Diamond.

Among historic diamonds one, the "Piggott," has gone out of existence. The story of its destruction is a tragical one. It was said to be worth $200,000. The diamond came into the possession of Ali Pasha, who always wore it in a green silk purse attached to his girdle.

He was wearing it when he was wounded by Reshid Pasha. Knowing that his wound was mortal, he immediately retired to his divan, gave orders that his favorite wife should be poisoned and then delivered the diamond to Captain D'Angias with the order that it should be crushed to powder in his presence. His command was obeyed, and the beautiful gem was utterly destroyed.

When Turtles Were Big.

Of the turtles it may be said that they represent the most ancient type of all vertebrates, resembling closely as they do the reptiles of their kind which existed so far back as the mesozoic era. There were sea tortoises during that epoch which measured 20 feet in spread of flippers, while some tertiary tortoises were not less big in body, measuring 12 feet from head to tail.

Stop the Blight

It is a sad thing to see fine fruit trees spoiled by the blight. You can always tell them from the rest. They never do well afterwards but stay small and sickly.

It is worse to see a blight strike children. Good health is the natural right of children. But some of them don't get their rights. While the rest grow big and strong one stays small and weak.

Scott's Emulsion can stop that blight. There is no reason why such a child should stay small. Scott's Emulsion is a medicine with lots of strength in it—the kind of strength that makes things grow.

Scott's Emulsion makes children grow, makes them eat, makes them sleep, makes them play. Give the weak child a chance. Scott's Emulsion will make it catch up with the rest.

Feb. 25: The draw of the new Lake Shore bridge was swung to-day at noon for the first time. It was swung by hand and was practically a trial swing in order to allow a floating derrick to pass through, so that the stone in the piers of the old bridge could be removed as they are now in a very dangerous position, and if the ice should go out it would cause a blockade at the bridge. The piers of the new draw are set in between the old draw piers, and there is not space enough to permit the ice to pass if it should suddenly break up. The Toledo Bridge company has completed an agreement with the Lake Shore railroad company whereby it receives the old bridge for the labor expended in tearing down and removing it.—Toledo Blade.

ODD FELLOWS

Of this Lodge entertained the

CLINTON BROTHERS

At a banquet and work last Tuesday evening

One of the most enjoyable events of the season occurred at the I. O. O. F. hall Tuesday evening Feb. 25th at which time the Clinton lodge confered the initatory degree and Tecumseh lodge confered the second degree. The work of both degrees was such as to receive the highest compliments of the Grand Master of the State, C. E. Williamson, and all the visitors present from Adrian, Dundee and New Jersey lodges.

After the degree work large tables were spread in the main room and the committee in charge of banquet consisting of G. H. Tansley, C. E. Williamson and F. A. McNeil proved themselves equal to their task, to which all did ample justice. After the banquet Grand Master C. E. Williamson was called upon, during his remarks he stated that he had visited a great many lodges throughout the state, both large and small, but had never witnessed any finer work than was done by the Clinton lodge and especially the charge given by Past Grand Dr. John Tuttle, Jr.

Short addresses were also given by Dr. Matteson, Dr. John Tuttle Jr., Marvin Pardee, Roy Codling, Davis and others from Clinton; Mr. Law, of Jersey City; Dr. E. D. Brown, of Dundee; J. J. Belcher, J. J. Orr, M. D. Green and others of Tecumseh lodge. It was not until the small hours of the morning that the guests departed for their homes, feeling that it was one of the most enjoyable events of Odd Fellowship.

Among the visitors from Clinton were Ed Parker, Dr. John Tuttle Jr., Marvin Pardee, Roy Codling, Frank Parker, Irving Hause, Dr. Matteson, Chas Clark, H. L. Bailey, Chas. Silvers, Will Fabrique, T. J. Marttny, F. Bunting, Ed Winters, Frank Seager, Elmer Shafer, Geo. Lancaster, Geo. Waterhouse, Ben Crane, Jas. McDermid and Mr. Law, of New Jersey.

THE SCHOOLS.

There has been very few absent marks this week, something is wrong.

Miss Merle Wood visited the several high school rooms Wednesday afternoon.

Odd or even! this is the cry upon all sides, even the teachers are beginning to count their marbles, the scholars find they play for keeps.

Miss Hattie Mott was pleasantly surprised at her residence in Tecumseh Wednesday evening by about 20 of her girl friends. The evening was spent in games, after which light refreshments were served.

The gymnasium now numbers 18 members. This is the limit. The ones lucky enough to belong report some great times, but out of the 18 members only one has been able to stand on his neck. This is a fact. Ask Don Wright.

THE CHURCHES.

There will be no services at the Universalist church Sunday.

Quarterly meeting Saturday and Sunday at the M. E. church. Dr. Ryan will preach Sunday morning at 10 a. m.

The subject of the morning sermon at the Presbyterian church next Sunday will be, "The greatness of John the Baptist."

A memorial service for Francis Willard will be held in the M. E. church on Sunday evening, March 2nd, at 7 o'clock Pastors from the several churches will take part, assisted by talent from Raisin Valley Seminary.

Mrs. John C. Schreder.

Mrs. John C. Schreder died of bronical pneumonia last evening at eight o'clock at her residence on Kilbuck street, after a short but painful illness. Mrs. Schreder has been a great sufferer for years but her last illness extended over a period of about a week. The funeral will be held from her late residence Sunday at two o'clock, and an obituary notice befitting the memory of the beloved woman will be published in the next issue of the HERALD.

Cement Walks.

The story has been circulated that I am not intending to contract for the building of cement walks this summer. As a matter of fact I shall remain in Tecumseh, build cement walks and contract for the best walks that can be made. All applications will receive prompt attention. WM. ASKIN.

Caucuses.

The village republicans have called a caucus to nominate a corporation ticket, at the council building Monday evening, March 3. On the next evening a people's caucus will be held at the same place.

It is understood that "Mark Hanna," "Poo Bah" and "Follow-along" in a body are not running this republican caucus so the candidates may enjoy a better show of election.

THE ANTHONY FENCE COMPANY.

A Promising Industry all but Assured for this Village.

WILL MANUFACTURE FENCE MACHINES

And Fence Ready to Put Up.

Persistence and industry have conquered all obstacles and Mr. D. P. Anthony can now say that the automatic fence machine, upon which he has expended so much time and money, is a tangible commercial proposition.

Mr. Anthony's machine has successfully withstood the critical examination of experts sent here by prospective investors for that purpose. These experts have unanimously conceded that this machine is not only the most rapid machine on the market, but that it produces the best knot and weaves absolutely the best fence of any machine in existence.

More than this, the labor and material required in producing the finished product are reduced to a minimum, inasmuch as the machine is entirely automatic; the staples for forming the knot being made and fed to the proper point by the machine itself, a feature which no other inventive genius has been able to incorporate in a similar mechanism. This excellent result, however, has not been attained by accident or by sudden inspiration. Mr. Anthony has been almost continually occupied with the construction and perfection of this automatic machine during the past six years. He has labored unceasingly, and today the machine is a monument to his patience and skill.

Had it not been for the death of no less a man than Collis P. Huntington, the great railroad magnate, it would have been impossible for Tecumseh to have secured an opportunity to retain this industry. Mr. Huntington contemplated the erection of a huge iron and steel plant near Norfolk, Virginia, and, convinced of the enormous possibilities of the wire fence business in America, set about to secure a suitable machine to produce a superior article. As a result of this search, the Anthony machine was examined by experts employed by Mr. Huntington whilst the first experimental machine was in Buffalo. Their report to their superior was most flattering, and had it not been for the sudden demise of the great financier the Anthony machine would, today, undoubtedly, be merrily grinding out fence in old Virginia.

But, "It is an ill wind which blows no good," and that which was good enough for Collis P. Huntington was certainly good enough for certain Tecumseh business men.

A little more than a year ago, Messrs. H. Brewer & Co., of this village, entered into a contract with Mr. Anthony, and, continually, since that time, experts have been employed in perfecting this already well nigh perfect mechanism. The united efforts and most painstaking superintendence of Mr. Anthony, Mr. Stout and Mr. Shull, together with the best mechanical skill of outside employees, are embodied in this perfected machine. Not until no "cog was lacking" was there an effort to interest men of money, but now that all obstacles have been cleared away, the Anthony Fence Company has sprung into existence and been formally incorporated under the laws of the State of Michigan with a capital stock of $200,000,00.

This capital is ample. A large fund in cash will be placed in the treasury and a considerable block of treasury stock will also be available as the demands of the business require.

No one will gainsay that the fence business of the United States is now huge, nor that it is less permanent than agriculture itself; hence, the success of an enterprise of this kind depends only upon two things: First a rapid and economical machine and a machine which will produce fence second to none.

Second: Efficient management. The first condition is the best answered by seeing the machine in operation and by viewing its finished product. The second, by considering the reputation and ability of the men who stand at the company's helm. Certainly no more astute financier resides in Lenawee county than Captain C. R. Miller, a gentleman whose interests are as great in Tecumseh as in his home city. Mr. Anthony's genius is too well known and too well demonstrated to admit of contradiction; and Mr. J. D. Shull is nothing if not, cautious, conservative and successful.

Hence starting under these favorable auspices; the best machine, the best fence, the best and most stable business, ample cash in the Treasury and competent management, success is assured. In accordance with the successful policy which has dominated the firm of H. Brewer & Company for more than forty years, no local interest outside of that company, was requested until the machine would do exactly what it was represented to do.

Now that this is an accomplished fact there is an opportunity for our townspeople to secure a limited amount of stock at a figure which will show a handsome profit. There are less than two thousand shares available for local purchase at this special price. Mr. Shull has this matter in charge and, for the present, the office of the company will be with H. Brewer & Co. The immediate policy of the Anthony Company will be to construct a battery of machines, manufacture fence with the present machine and as soon as conditions warrant, they will erect a suitable plant for their especial purposes.

No bonus is requested by this concern, it merely asks the citizens of Tecumseh to cooperate with it, to push it and not to "knock" it. The control of the stock is with Tecumseh men and a modern factory will be erected here if the people of Tecumseh signify their desire to have it done. Push the Anthony Fence Company and the Anthony Fence Company will push Tecumseh.

The officers and directors of the company are as follows:

President—Captain C. R. Miller.
Vice President and General Manager D. P. Anthony.
Secretary and Treasurer—J. D. Shull.
Board of Directors—C. R. Miller, D. P. Anthony, J. D. Shull, P. W. A. Fitzsimmons and O. F. Sheldon.

HOW WE PHOTOGRAPHED THE BABY.

The photographer fastened the baby in a suspicious looking mechanism which he averted would hold the baby comfortably and at the same time be invisible (I could not help thinking what an admirable wife and mother such a machine would make), then stepped back and looked inside the camera to see if its insides were all right. Failing to discover a fit of indigestion or other weakness in the machine he shook himself free from the mantle of cloth, stepped to one side, ran his fingers through his hair, grabbed the rubber vermiform appendix that opens the eye of the instrument and remarked in a weary sort of a way, as though he anticipated a struggle: "Now look pleasant, please."

I gazed at him pityingly. No need to ask that man whether he was married and the father of children.

"You don't suppose that baby understands such language as that, do you?" said my wife witheringly.

"I always thought I spoke fairly good English," the photographer answered. "However, perhaps the baby will understand you better."

"Well, I should hope so," answered the little lady. Then she smiled upon our infant and said: "Didn't its cutesy wootsey litley bitsey soulsum woulsum want to smilesy wilesy sumsum wumsum for its momsum womsum?"

Our heir apparent gave one look of disgust, curled the northeast corner of her mouth up into her southwest ear, closed her eyes, turned red and yelled bloody murder in choicest baby talk.

"Doesn't seem to work any better than mine, does it?" said the photographer with a sneer.

"Humph!" ejaculated the little lady. "She's afraid of you—and no wonder!"

Then the photographer tried again. He put a pet cat on top of the camera and a canary bird on the chair beside it. Then he stirred up a sleepy monkey that reposed in a corner, wound up a mechanical bug and started it across the floor, tooted on a tin horn, beat a toy drum and danced a jig. No use. The baby simply looked more disgusted still, and yelled the louder.

Then the little lady sang a song, but without effect. Perceiving that a variety show was in order I took a turn then, and rendered my inimitable imitation of a man trying to recite a poem. Then the photographer performed some clever juggling tricks, the most wonderful of which was extracting two dollars on account from my own pocket (I had hoped to get the photographs charged), and the little lady followed with "Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight." On this I made an impromptu parody entitled "Baby Will Not Smile Today," and then the little lady suggested that we give her the legitimate. We did. First we gave the dagger scene from "Macbeth," then the sword scene from "Richard III." We closed with Anthony's oration, with the little lady as Anthony, myself as the populace, and the photographer as the corpse. He said he felt like one. The baby "lent us her ears" all right, but look pleasant she would not. Every alternative having failed, I at length resolved upon what I call my "last resort." I got down on my hands and knees and let the youngster toy with my hair and mustache. And then she smiled.

PHOTOGRAPHING ON MARBLE.

A pretty effect is obtained by printing a photograph on marble, which can be done in the following way: An unpolished plate of marble must be coated with a solution of benzine, 500 parts; spirits of turpentine, 50 parts; asphaltum, 50 parts, and pure wax, 5 parts. When this is dry the plate is exposed under a negative, which will take in sunshine about 20 minutes. Develop with spirits of turpentine or benzine and wash in plenty of water. The next step is to cover the plate where it is intended to be left white with an alcoholic solution of shellac, and immerse the same in any dye which is soluble in water. After awhile, when enough of the coloring matter has entered the pores of the marble, it is taken out and polished.

* * *

I set up my camera the other day in front of a peculiar house, whose eaves were very wide It was a grand chance to see how well I could get the shadows and compare a backed with an unbacked plate. Well, I'd no more than got a focus when out came a highly excited woman gesticulating frantically and bidding me in unmistakably plain language to go hence. Not seeing any harm in what I was doing I stated that I wouldn't do it and went on getting ready to take that innocent experimental picture. "You won't get paid, not a cent I tell ye," said she as she retreated, and as a last warning as she disappeared and slammed the door viciously she added, "not a DERN cent." Now wasn't she a good careful woman?

A PHANTOM PICTURE.

Put a sheet of ground glass behind a portrait negative and place it against a window strongly lighted. Darken all the panes except the one against which the negative is placed, then look steadily at one point of the negative for about half a minute. On then directing the eyes towards the dimly illuminated ceiling of the room a beautiful positive of a rich sepia will be seen. By this simple method a likeness can be recognized by those who are not practised in examining negatives.

THEY ALL SAY SO.

Not only in Tecumseh, But in Every City and Town in the Union.

If the reader took the time and trouble to ask his fellow residents of Tecumseh, the simple question given below he would obtain the one answer If he would read the statements now being published in Tecumseh, which refers to this answer, it would surprise nim to note that they number so many. As many more could be, and may be, published, but in the meantime ask the first person you meet what cures backache? The answer will be, Doan's Kidney Pills. Here is a citizen who endorses our claim:

Mr. C. Patterson, the well known sexton residing in the southeastern section of Tecumseh, says: "For over a year I had a soreness and pain in the small of the back at times quite severe more especially if I did a hard day's work or took cold, for it always settled in my kidneys. The kidney secretions were also discolored and irregular and I had all symtoms of aggravated kidney complaint. I heard several people praising Doan's Kidney Pills so concluding to try them I got a box at C. A. Wright's drug store and commenced the treatment. I found it just suited my case for it helped me right from the start. It stopped the pain in my back and regulated and cleared up the kidney secretions. I have no hesitation in recommending Doan's Kidney Pills to anyone having any difficulty with their kidneys."

"Dry as Statistics."

It is fairly obvious that the study or statistics is not exactly what would be termed a popular pastime, says Winthrop M. Daniels in The Atlantic. Librarians do not discover any extensive demand for statistical literature. Sir John Lubbock, if I remember rightly, found no place for a single volume of figures in his hundred best books, and in that flood of articles on "Books That Have Helped Me, by Authors' Great and Authors Small," the same significant silence seemed to be maintained. There were some very curious books that had apparently proved helpful to certain persons, but there was unbroken testimony of a negative kind that nobody had ever been helped by a blue book.

To say of anything "as dry as statistics" is at once to consign it to the nethermost limbo of aridity. Such is the verdict upon the finished statistical product. As for the methods employed in constructing such tables—weighted averages, index numbers or curves of error—these to the wayfaring men are hidden and ingenious refinements of cruelty, to be avoided at all hazards or at least forgotten with a shudder and a prayer.

How He Fooled the Dog.

A gentleman who is fond of studying wild animals in their natural surroundings once had an opportunity of seeing for himself an example of the cunning for which the fox has become proverbial.

As he was standing near the bank of a river one winter day, he saw a fox run out upon the ice and make straight for a hole. At the edge of the opening he stopped, turned, followed his tracks back to the bank, ran down the stream and paused to await developments.

In a little while a dog came tearing out of the woods, with his nose close to the ice and snow. He ran along the ice with his head down, following the scent until he reached the opening. It was then too late to check his speed. He plunged into the water and was lost under the ice.

The fox meantime had waited in plain sight to watch the effect of his little trick. After the dog came into view the fox remained perfectly motionless until he saw his old enemy disappear. Then, with a look on his face which seemed to combine a good natured grin with a mild contempt, he went nonchalantly off about his business.

A Curious Palm of South America.

One of the most curious palms in the world is called the ita and is very abundant on the banks of the Amazon, Rio Negro and Orinoco rivers. In the delta of the latter it occupies swampy tracts, which are at times completely inundated and present the appearance of forests rising out of the water. The swamps are inhabited by a tribe of Indians called Guaranes, who subsist almost entirely upon the produce of the tree. During the annual floods they suspend their houses from tops of the tall stems of the palms. The outer skin of the young leaves is made into cords for hammocks, and the soft inner bark yields a nutritious farinaceous substance.

None Too Liberal.

"Yes, but that's all he does spend."—Detroit Free Press.

Snow From a Clear Sky.

The most wonderful snowstorms of all that may be seen every winter in the Adirondacks are those that prevail when the sky is cloudless. Of these there are several varieties. Every week or two we would see what looked like a fog form about the distant hills and then come drifting across the creek valley. Doubtless it was a real snow laden cloud that had been drifting along until it struck our level (1,300 feet above the sea) in the Adirondacks, when the conditions became favorable for the release of its feathery burden.

We saw these clouds fill the air with flakes that were driven along almost horizontally by a strong gale, although the tops of our old hemlocks and spruces rose into the clear air and unobstructed sunlight above the highest level of the snow producing air stratum. We even saw the snow so thick in the air about us that the trunks of trees six feet above the earth were not visible, although the treetops could be seen, and the sun shone down through the shallow storm with strength enough to cast distinct shadows.

We have stood on a quiet, sunlit hilltop and looked down into a valley less than 100 feet below us, where a snowstorm was raging with violence and the temperature was frigid.—Scribner's.

A Man In the House.

There is a young criminal lawyer in Memphis, Tenn., who on the occasion of his becoming of age began the celebration of his birthday in a way that caused his household a great deal of consternation.

On the eve of the fete, shortly after midnight, the young man's family were suddenly startled from their slumbers by a loud voice in the house calling: "There's a man in the house! There's a man in the house!"

The valiant pater familias rushed from his room, bearing in his hands a heavy billet of firewood, to learn the cause of the disturbance and to capture the intruder. His son was standing in the hall, shouting at the top of his voice.

"Where's the man?" exclaimed the old gentleman.

Piper Legends.

The Wends, who, we believe, are the ancestors of the modern Prussians, are the center of many legends. The Pied Piper of Hamelin was a Wend; so also was the piper of the Harz mountains, who appeared so many days a year and played unearthly tunes and whosoever heard at once fell into a frenzy, from which there was no escaping. All these pied and weird pipers assembled once a year at the Brocken, where there was a general carnival, the arch fiend leading the concert on a violin, witches rolling around and fiddling on the skulls of horses and the pipers adding the concert of their unholy instruments.—Chambers' Journal.

Terrific Thunder.

The largest rainfall on earth has been recorded at Chera Punji, on the bay of Bengal, but the most violent thunderstorms ever observed are probably those of French Guiana. At Cape Orange, some forty miles south of Cayenne, a French naval officer saw the rills of the coast hills turned into waterfalls by a cloudburstlike storm, while the crashing thunder peals were incessant and often almost deafening, so much so, indeed, that some of the sailors began to mutter long forgotten prayers, probably thinking the day of judgment near at hand.

Poor Sinner's Bell.

The poor sinner's bell is a bell in the city of Breslau, in the province of Silesia, Prussia, and hangs in the tower of one of the city churches. It was cast July 17, 1386, according to historic records. It is said that a great bell founder of the place had undertaken to make the finest church bell he had ever made.

When the metal was melted, the founder withdrew for a few moments, leaving a boy to watch the furnace and enjoining him not to meddle with the catch that held the molten metal, but the boy disobeyed the caution, and when he saw the metal flowing into the mold he called the founder.

The latter rushed in and, seeing as he thought his work of weeks undone and his masterpiece ruined, struck the boy a blow that caused his immediate death. When the metal cooled and the mold was opened, the bell was found to be not only perfect, but of marvelous sweetness of tone.

The founder gave himself up to the authorities, was tried and condemned to death. On the day of his execution the bell was rung to call people to attend church and offer a prayer for the unhappy man's soul, and from that it obtained the name of "the poor sinner's bell."

Kingly Superstitions.

Kingship has been kin to superstition always. James I. of England was superstitious about dates, and there were remarkable coincidences in his life with certain dates of the calendar. The day of the month on which he was born was strangely interwoven with the days of birth and marriage of his wife and some of his children and their wives. But James was an old fool who made love to young Buckingham, who laughed in his face and robbed him of his jewels.

Napoleon was superstitious about the way he put on his stockings. Frederick the Great and the great Peter of Russia were superstitious about dozens of things. Marlborough, both as Jack Churchill and the duke, was superstitious as well as a thief and a traitor. Nearly all the Stuarts were superstitious and double dealers in religion. Henry of Navarre was superstitious, but that never kept him from a thousand infidelities. All the children of Catherine of Medici were scared to death by their superstitions, but they could lie, cheat and murder just as well. If Cromwell was a victim of superstition, he kept it to himself.—New York Press.

Fishing For Ducks.

In India an ingenious scheme is practiced for taking ducks on a line, which is attached at one end to a flexible stick stuck up in the mud, the other extremity having a double pointed needle of bone attached to it. The latter is baited by stringing upon it some grains of corn. Presently along comes Mr. Duck, swallows the needle and finds himself a captive the moment he tries to fly away. In olden times the Cape Cod fishermen depended largely for bait upon the seafowl they took on their voyages. To catch them they threw out fishing lines with hooks on the end, to which were attached chunks of cod liver. The latter floated because of the oil they contained, and murres, gulls and other birds swallowing them were quickly pulled in, skinned and chopped up.

Roast Peacock.

In the old days a peacock was perhaps the most gorgeous and decorative dish on the Christmas board. This was prepared by first carefully removing the skin without losing the feathers. The fowl was then dressed, stuffed with all kinds of good things, roasted and finally sewed into its skin, still retaining the brilliant plumage. The beak was gilded, and this dish, fit for a king, was placed upon the table amid the blare of trumpets and the rapturous applause of the revelers.

No Cause For Care.

A Welsh editor had misspelled the name of a famous poet of Wales.

"Why do you spell Llywarch Hen's name Llwyarch?" asked a friend of the editor.

"Why? Does he object?" asked the editor.

"Object!" echoed the other. "Why, he has been dead 1,200 years."

"Oh, then, I don't care a toss," said the editor.

Studied Indifference.

"Why did we arrive late and leave before the opera was over?" asked the youngest daughter. "It was very enjoyable."

"Of course it was," answered Mrs. Cumrox; "but, my dear, we had to show people that we didn't care whether we got our money's worth or not."—Exchange.

Satisfactorily Explained.

"John, when you came home last night you talked and acted very queerly. You were lifting your feet endeavoring to step over imaginary obstacles."

"Oh, yes, my dear. All the evening I felt as if I were walking on clouds. You remember we had angel cake for supper."—Chelsea Gazette.

A Pecuniary Fatigue.

"Don't forget," said the willing worker, "that money talks."

"Yes," answered Senator Sorghum a little glumly, "but I can't help wishing that you boys would select another phonograph occasionally."—Exchange.

Where Amber Is Found.

The largest quantity of amber is found on the southern shore of the Baltic between Memel and Konigsberg, where it is cast up by the action of the ground swell after the northerly gales. It is also found on the coast of Sicily, on the shores of the Adriatic, on the English beach of Norfolk and Suffolk and at Cape Sable in Maryland. Mining for amber in beds of brown lignite or wood coal is carried on in Prussia, and it is found in excavations all over Europe.

The Aromatic Clove Tree.

A peculiarity of the clove tree is that every part of it is aromatic, though the greatest strength is in the bud. Besides the buds, the stems are gathered and form an article of commerce commanding one-fifth the price of cloves and having about the same percentage of strength. To this is due the fact that ground cloves can be purchased in the home market at a lower price than whole cloves.

OLD AGE.

We would like to remind everybody in this town who has an aging father or mother, of one duty they owe to them.

Make their last years happy and pleasant ones. There is no way of doing this better than keeping our dear old friends and relatives strong, healthy and robust.

We wish everyone who feels that they have passed the turning point in life would call on us and let us explain everything that VINOL will do.

We know surely that this is a great rebuilder, flesh maker and strength creator. We have posted ourselves thoroughly on the reasons at to why it is the greatest tonic in the world. Here is a letter that will interest all who are growing old or who need a tonic. It reads as follows:

"My mother is over eighty years of age. Her strength was very much depleted and her appetite left her. The doctors said we must get her a good tonic, so we decided to try VINOL. It proved to be just the medicine my mother needed for it built her up wonderfully. — C. A. TALBOT, Bangor, Maine."

We indorse VINOL and stand prepared to prove all the claims that we make for this tonic, and will gladly refund to anyone who buys VINOL of us the money that they have paid for it, if they are not satisfied with what it does.

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the more severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? ONCE IS ENOUGH TO SEE

Gustave Dore's portrait of Dante is worth seeing—once. But once is enough. Some such look you notice on the faces of those who have suffered, and still suffer, much physical pain; people subject to rheumatism, gout, neuralgia, periodic headache, lumbago, or pain from some old lesion. This pain-habit puts its marks on them, as the custom of handling ropes crooks a sailor's fingers; or as too much riding of a bicycle stamps a worried expression on certain faces. No wonder people said of the Italian poet as he passed along, "There goes

It is frequently said that Benson's Plaster is Pain's Master. It cures when others are not even able to relieve. For thirty years the leading external remedy. The old-style plasters, as well as salves, liniments, oils, etc., have little or no efficacy as compared with it. Use it. Trust it. Keep it in the house. Ask for Benson's Plaster; take no other. NEW BILL FRAMED

To Ensure U. S. Standard of Value.

BANKS GET MORE DUTIES

Makes Silver Dollar Redeemable in Gold—Figures That the Average Rate of Interest Will Be Lowered—Bill Will Be Introduced Today.

Washington, March 10.—Chairman Fowler of the house committee on banking and currency today will introduce an important financial measure framed by the republican members of the committee after conferences extending through the last two months. It brings together into one financial measure a number of propositions which have been urged separately heretofore. Mr. Fowler explains the purposes of the bill as follows:

"The purposes of the bill are: To transfer from the government to the banks the responsibility of protecting the necessary gold reserve and the burden of furnishing gold for export, thereby saving our commerce from the destructive apprehensions growing out of raids on the gold in the treasury, which can now only be replenished by a tax imposed upon the people through the sale of bonds; to provide a currency always responsible and adequate to the demands of trade everywhere, and to equalize and lower the average rate of interest in all parts of the United States; to secure for American enterprise and American capital privileges and opportunities of engaging in international banking under national law and so lay a foundation upon which to build an American merchant marine; to remove the last vestige of doubt with regard to our standard of value.

"The measure provides for international banking and a division of banking and currency is established under a board of control instead of a single individual in the person of the comptroller of the currency as heretofore. The board will consist of three members whose terms of office are for 12 years, so arranged that only one member will retire every four years.

"If the measure now introduced should become a law, it is confidently believed that the national banks will assume the current redemption in gold coin of one hundred and thirty millions of United States notes. In consideration of the obligation assumed by the national banks they will have the right during the succeeding five years to issue gradually, as business may require, an amount of bank notes equal to 60 per centum of their paid up and unimpaired capital; provision being made also for an emergency circulation. As the notes are taken out for circulation the banks will deposit with the government a guarantee fund of 5 per centum of the amount of the notes so issued. The national banks hereafter will be required to pay interest upon the government deposits at the rate of 1 per centum per annum.

"This 5 per centum guarantee fund and the tax upon the bank notes will be used to protect the bank notes, and the excess of such taxes, with the interest on the government deposits, will be used to pay off the United States notes which the banks assume to currently redeem. It is asserted that the whole one hundred and thirty millions of United States notes, which the banks have assumed to currently redeem, will be paid off in 30 years out of the taxes collected upon circulation and interest paid by the banks upon government deposits.

"The United States will be divided into clearing house districts to facilitate the current redempeion of the bank notes, so that the amount of notes outstanding at any time always will be co-ordinated with the amount of trading to be done, precisely as checks and drafts reflect the amount of commercial work being carried on.

"By and with the consent of the board of control, banks may have more than one place for doing business, being authorized to establish themselves in various cities of the country.

"No bank note of a denomination less than ten dollars will be issued, and the secretary of the treasury shall not issue a silver certificate of a denomination greater than five dollars, and thereafter, upon the presentation to him of one hundred silver dollars, or any multiple thereof and a demand for their redemption, shall exchange gold coin for the same."

Funston Makes Peculiar Statement.

New York, March 10.—Brig.-Gen. Frederick Funston was the guest of honor at a dinner given Saturday night at the Lotus club. More than 300 members of the club were present. Gen. Funston discussed the situation in the Philippines. He said in part: "All of these men who have fallen since December, 1900, have been victims of a lot of misinformed and misguided people here in the United States. It is perfectly proper for us to have all sorts of opinions as to what we should do with the Philippine islands, but, for heaven's sake, let us keep them to ourselves until every square inch of that territory recognizes the sovereignty of the United States."

WOULD KILL HIM

Unpleasant Experience of a Negaunee Minister.

A MOB WAS AFTER HIM

Made a Tour of the Saloons to Spot Law-Breakers—Sympathizers of Saloonists Gathered a Force to Attack Him.

Negaunee, Mich., March 10.—Rev. S. M. Gilchriese, pastor of the Methodist church here, who a week ago began a crusade against the saloon men, who had been conducting their business in alleged violation of the law, was last Saturday night attacked by a mob of sympathizers of the liquor dealers.

The preacher and several members of his congregation started at 11 o'clock to make the rounds of the city to ascertain if any saloons were open after hours. This angered a number of men, who were more or less under the influence of liquor, and by the time the preacher and his committee had made the rounds they found a mob of 50 or more waiting for them. The life of the minister was threatened by the leaders, who yelled to their drunken companions, "Let's cut out his heart."

The mob followed Gilchriese to the parsonage, where there was another mob awaiting him. The latter had congregated in his yard. More threats of "Kill him!" etc., went up, and the preacher dashed into the house, saying that if the mob did not disperse within a short time he would see what a little cold lead would do. The police appeared and the crowd scattered. It is expected that the leaders will be arrested, as they have been spotted.

Gilchriese says he is now more determined than ever to fight the saloon men who persist in violating the law. An organization has been perfected with that object in view and its membership now numbers about 100 members of the Methodist church.

Robbery in Grand Rapids.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 10.—Will Hagens, bookkeeper for the American Steam Laundry Co. was held up in his office Saturday night by two strangers at the point of a revolver and robbed of two cash boxes containing $200 in cash. It was the boldest robbery committed in this city for many years. Hagens was alone in the office at the time, and as he turned to telephone, two men walked in. He paid but little attention to them at the time, but when he had finished telephoning he turned around to his desk and was met by two revolvers pointed at his face. The men ordered him to go into the vault and kept him covered with their guns. They pushed him into the open vault and, grabbing two cash boxes near the door, ran out of the building. Hagens says the men were masked when they covered him with their guns. The scene of the robbery is one of the business streets of the city. The men ran through an alley and escaped with their plunder, leaving no clue to their identity.

Tried to Kill Herself.

Pontiac, Mich., March 10.—May Patton, whose father lives near Cormerce, swallowed an ounce of laudanum and still lives. May was the complaining witness against Lewis Hagley, who is held for seduction. A former case for criminal assault was dropped in the circuit court when it was learned that May was more than 16 years of age. An adjourned examination was set for Friday and at the time of adjournment May was directed to go home with her father instead of to Novi, where she had been living. She refused, declaring she would rather die. She produced an ounce vial of laudanum and swallowed the contents. The father hustled the child home without even asking the aid of a physician, and how she lived is a conundrum to officers here.

The four-year-old son of Elmer E. Ulrey, North Bong street, Saginaw, swallowed a safety pin and it has not yet been removed. It was decided to use the X-ray in locating the pin and an operation may be necessary. The condition of the child is regarded as serious

A 40-pound otter was killed Saturday evening on the fruit farm of Joseph Smith, who lives adjoining the St. Joseph river in St. Joseph. The otter measured four feet three inches and for four years has been seen at different times. It is believed to be the only otter in that entire section.

Presiding Elder's Misfortune.

Coldwater, Mich., March 8.—Dr. Van Schoick, presiding elder of the M. E. church, was thrown from a carriage while driving from Centreville to Nottawa, breaking both arms and severely injuring his neck. He was brought home and is in a serious condition.

Another Double Tragedy.

St. Louis, Mo., March 8.—Patrick McGinnis last night shot and killed his wife, then turned the weapon upon himself and blew his brains out. Mrs. McGinnis was an habitual drunkard, it is said, and had served a number of terms in the workhouse. His wife's conduct, failure to obtain employment and ill-health upset McGinnis's mind. The couple leave four children.

BEHIND THE BARS

Wm. Klumpp Arrested for Murder of His Wife.

ALLEGED GAVE HER POISON

Strychnine Was Sent Her in Sample Headache Powder—Another Woman Is Believed to Be Mixed Up in the Case.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 8.—William Klumpp was arrested yesterday charged with the murder of his wife by poison administered in a headache powder last Sunday at their home in Lowell. He is in jail and denies that he has any guilty knowledge of the tragedy.

He denies that there is another woman in the case, love for whom would make him desire to be free. He declares his family relations were happy and cannot imagine that he or his wife had an enemy in the world.

The theory of Sheriff Chapman, who has been investigating the case, is that Klumpp, infatuated with another woman, desired to get rid of his present wife that he might marry her. The name of the other woman is not given out, but it is stated she obtained a divorce from her husband about the time that Klumpp was divorced from his first wife.

They were to be married then, but instead he took up with the girl, then 18 years old, who is now dead. The woman came to this city, and it is stated that Klumpp was a frequent visitor in town and always called on her. He was here two weeks ago, registering under an assumed name at a cheap hotel, and remaining over night.

The sheriff's theory is that, upon that occasion arrangements were made for putting his wife out of the way, and that the murderer is either Klumpp or the woman who was in love with him.

The handwriting on the fatal letter was in a feminine hand, and was postmarked Lowell.

Klumpp's story, as related at the coroner's inquest, is that he received the envelope containing the powders from the Lowell postoffice last Thursday. The powders were in a small envelope and around them were advertising circulars and testimonials. The letter was addressed to his wife and, upon going home, he gave it to her. After that it passed from his mind.

Sunday he was exercising his colt in the yard and his wife made a laughing remark from the window, where she was watching him. Then she said she had a headache and that she would try the sample powders. She took one, and when he entered the house a short time later she threw her arms around his neck and said she feared she was going to have a fit.

She went into convulsions, and when the doctor arrived she was beyond help, and died at 10 o'clock that night from strychnine poisoning. This is all he knew of the tragedy, he said.

Mrs. Miller, aged 68 years, living across the street from the Klumpp house, received a similar sample package the day before Mrs. Klumpp received her letter, and this, like the remaining powder in the Klumpp envelope, was found to consist half of strychnine.

Killed by a Mad Bull.

Traverse City, Mich., March 8.—Neils Anderson was so badly injured Thursday afternoon by a Holstein bull belonging to the Northern Michigan asylum that he died Friday morning. The bull broke out of his enclosure, and, after being brought back, became very wild. Anderson, who has had charge of him nearly two years, fearlessly entered the enclosure, when the bull turned upon him, pinning him against the fence. Men with clubs and pitchforks released the man after a severe struggle. While not seemingly seriously injured at the time, owing to the fact that the bull had been dehorned, internal injuries developed, causing Anderson's death in a few hours. The bull was shot.

Pardon Board at Work.

Jackson, Mich., March 8.—The prison board has recommended for parole John Rourke, sent from Detroit Sept. 26, 1886, for 26 years, for robbing while armed with a dangerous weapon, and Thomas S. Bailey, sent from Cass county Oct. 5, 1897, to eight years, for taking indecent liberties with a female child. The board has sent the recommendations to the governor.

MICHIGAN BRIEFS.

Hugh A. Matheson, who was convicted Tuesday at Sault Ste. Marie of the murder of Peter Stone at Eckerman in January, was sentenced to 18 years in Marquette prison.

Mrs. Maggie Huciak, the young Polish shoplifter of Coldwater, pleaded guilty to the third charge and was fined $100. This makes $300 the woman has paid in fines in the past three weeks.

While Miss Elizabeth Miller of Manistique was preparing breakfast the other morning she was startled on breaking open an egg to find a snake in it. The reptile has been preserved in alcohol and is arousing great interest here.

A hypnotist at Howard City put a subject to sleep and placed him in a store window until evening. While he was being carried to the hall the sidewalk gave way and the subject was dropped 10 feet. He never woke up and was uninjured.

Pingree's Picture in Capitol.

Lansing, Mich., March 8.—J. R. Hanna arrived from Detroit yesterday with Percy Ives's full-length portrait in oil of the late Gov. Pingree, and superintended its hanging in the executive parlors. It is a most excellent likeness, notwithstanding the fact that Gov. Pingree went to Europe on his last journey before completing the sittings.

BACK TO NEW YORK

Prince Henry Highly Delighted Over His Trip.

JOURNEYED INTO 13 STATES

His Train Traversed Over Four Thousand Miles in Nine Days—Visited Albany and West Point on Friday.

New York, March 8.—Prince Henry of Prussia yesterday completed his tour and is one more in New York, where he will remain until Monday, when he goes to Philadelphia. He was absent from the city for nine days, during which time his special train was within the territory of 13 states and logged a total distance of 4,358 miles. He was greatly pleased with his trip, and, through his aide, Capt. von Muller, issued a statement expressing his satisfaction at the opportunity which came to him, and his gratification at the cordiality with which he was received throughout the country. Capt. von Muller in part said:

"His royal highness is very much pleased by his trip into the interior of the United States. He is fully aware of the fact that he has had only a very superficial glimpse of a very small portion of the United States, and that he might perhaps have used his time to greater advantage had he remained in one of the larger cities of the east. But he is convinced, nevertheless, that, considering the character of his mission, the trip was the right thing for him to do. In making it he has obtained a very fair idea of the vastness of the country and its resources, which the capital of the United States and the great commercial centers of the east alone could not have given him. But more than this impression he values the hearty welcome which he met in all the places he went through, a welcome that showed him how the people of the United States everywhere understood and appreciated the intention of the German emperor in sending him here.

"The receptions by the great cities of the south and the middle west were more than he ever had expected, and so were the receptions in the east. But his royal highness is equally thankful for what the smaller places did in showing him their good will, though the train in such places stopped only a few minutes and frequently not at all.

"Altogether the prince is most gratified by his trip and shall never forget how the American people everywhere met him with hospitality and sympathy."

His last day on the special train which carried him to the south, west and east rivalled in interest any of the others spent by the prince on the tour, for it began with a visit to Albany, included a run in bright sunlight down the west shore of the Hudson river, and closed with a reception at the United States military academy at West Point.

He was received by the two houses of the legislature, and returned his thanks to their presiding officers for the honor. He looked through the capitol, and returning under guard of cavalry, infantry and police to Union station, left at 10:30 o'clock for West Point.

West Point was reached at 2 o'clock, and the prince was received with the military honor due his place in the naval service of his country. As the cavalry escort showed at the brow of the inclined road, Knox battery fired 21 guns. The cadets, formed in six companies, were at once marched on the field, and the prince, with Col. Mills and their respective staffs, inspected them. Dress parade followed, with the prince as reviewing officer. After visiting memorial hall the prince and his staff went to the riding school, where the cadets gave an exhibition of riding.

Prince Henry sent for George W. Boyd, assistant general passenger agent of the Pennsylvania railroad, who personally directed the railroad arrangements of the tour, and thanked him. He paid high compliments to American railroads, and in conclusion asked Mr. Boyd to be his guest at luncheon on Tuesday next.

Consul-General Buenz and Consul Geissler met the special at Weehauken and escorted the prince to the ferry steamer Westpoint. The Westpoint ran to 42d street and landed the royal passenger at 5:50 o'clock. Captain of Detectives Titus and a dozen detectives, two score patrolmen and a squad of mounted police were on hand to conduct the prince to the Waldorf-Astoria.

Got There Too Late.

Chicago, March 8.—After racing across the state in an endeavor to prevent the marriage of his daughter, Miss Daisy Clem, to Gordon Alexander, H. A. Clem, president of the National Stock Yards of East St. Louis, arrived in Chicago last night just in time to witness the conclusion of the wedding ceremony. Then instead of becoming enraged over his lack of success, he accepted the situation and gave his blessing to the couple. The only objection which the parents of the young couple had to their marriage was that occasioned by their extreme youth. The bride, who was one of the East St. Louis beauties, is but 17 years old. Gordon Alexander, who has been employed in St. Louis, is the son of Wm. H. Alexander of Mobile, Ala., is 20 years old and comes from one of the best families in the south.

Kansas City, March 8.—Arthur and Benjamin Lockridge, twins, five months old, died at their home in Kansas City, Kan., yesterday from the effects of four drops of laudanum administered to them by their father, J. N. Lockridge. The children were restless and the father gave them the laudanum as a medicine.

Two robberies were committed Thursday night in this city. Entrance was made into the Withington spring lock fence company's office and about $10 taken from the safe, a heavy hammer and punch being used. The burglars later visited St. Joseph's church, where an attempt was made to enter the tabernacle where are kept the chalices and ciboriums, which are used to keep the sacrament, and are quite valuable. Before any damage was done the thieves left in a hurry leaving their tools, which were found Friday morning.—Adrian Times.

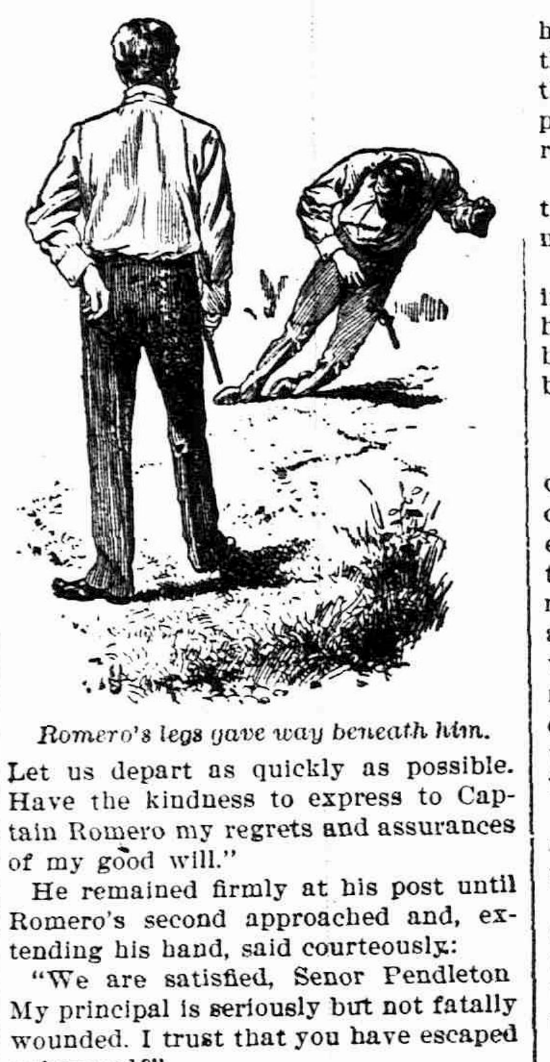
THE KNIFE THROWERS

By FREDERIC VAN RENSSELAER DEY,
Author of "Not Like Other Men," Etc.

Copyright, 1901, by Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey.

"Romero is not dead," said the American, speaking rapidly. "I did not kill him, but he will not want a second shot. The bullet is through his hips.



Romero's legs gave way beneath him.

Let us depart as quickly as possible. Have the kindness to express to Captain Romero my regrets and assurances of my good will."

He remained firmly at his post until Romero's second approached and, extending his hand, said courteously:

"We are satisfied, Senor Pendleton My principal is seriously but not fatally wounded. I trust that you have escaped unharmed?"

"Thank you, yes; Captain Agramonte has already conveyed my regrets to you, I believe. May I hope that you, senor, will do me the honor to count me as a friend?"

"The honor will be mine, Senor Pendleton," was the reply. Then the two men grasped hands, bowed to each other and parted. A few moments later, having bidden adieu to Agramonte, Pendleton, escorted by his charro friend, Pancho, was again on the road returning to his place of imprisonment.

That they arrived without incident and therefore undiscovered was due doubtless to the management of the Mexican guide, but it was with mingled sensations of pleasure and regret that Pendleton composed himself to the luxury of rest when he was again alone in the room of his mysterious jailer, with the iron grating closed and locked and Pancho gone.

Whatever the events of the day might vouchsafe, he felt that he was prepared to meet them, having kept his engagement on the Passeo and having outwitted the designs of the woman whom once he had rescued from the ferocity of the very man who that morning had fallen before him, stricken by the very bullet which he had intended to place among the vitals of the American.

CHAPTER III.

THE OBLIGATION OF SILENCE.

INCIDENTS that are exceptionally portentous are frequently the least prolific of results. It was so in the case of Pendleton. Nothing happened. The day passed without once affording him the sight of a human being. He regretted his coffee, but there was native wine in abundance, with cold meats and luxuries sufficient to have provided a company of men with sustenance for several days. He passed the time in reading, in walking up and down the room and in various means of disposing of the seemingly interminable period between the return from the dueling ground and the darkness of the succeeding night. Never had a day seemed so long, but it came to an end at last, and never had the sun disappeared for Burr Pendleton so pleasantly. Still, there were more endless hours to wait, for it was not until 10 o'clock in the evening when he heard a voice at the grating and knew that the time for liberation was at hand.

It was Pancho who came, but he did not speak. He only unlocked the grating and stood respectfully aside while the American passed out. He made no remark when he dexterously threw a serape over Pendleton's head. Beyond that there was no attempt at coercion. The lasso was not used again, and it was only through an expressive pressure upon his arm as it was grasped by the Mexican that Pendleton knew that he was to be treated with every courtesy and consideration. Upon the friendship of this unknown Mexican he knew from the experiences of the past night he could rely, and he permitted himself to be led again along the graveled paths, among the shrubbery and finally found himself the occupant of a carriage which was driven rapidly away as soon as he had entered it. The serape was removed from Pendleton's head as soon as they were safely within the carriage and the curtains had been drawn.

When at last it came to a halt and the American was informed that he could alight, Pendleton said:

"Pancho, I shall not forget your kindnesses to me. I am sorry that you will not permit me to offer you some substantial reward, but I feel that I would offend you if I should insist upon it. You already know much about me, more than I am aware of, doubtless. I have written on this card an address in the city of New York, where a communication will reach me or from where one will be forwarded to me at any time. If the time should ever come when I can render you a service, consider it done. Say to the senorita that I forgive her for preventing me from engaging in the duel with Captain Romero; say that I am informed that a friend acted for me in my absence. Where are we? At the bronze statue?"

"Si, senor," replied Pancho.

"Good night, then. I will walk the remainder of the distance. Adios, my friend."

"Adios, senor."

Pendleton had walked nearly to the upper end of the Alameda before he remembered that he had left his case of pistols in the carriage, but with the thought that Pancho might derive pleasure from the possession of the weapons as souvenir of the occasion, he shrugged his shoulders and hurried onward. He was surprised to discover James placidly engaged in packing.

"Even after Captain Agramonte called and told me about the meeting, sir," he explained in reply to his master's look of surprised inquiry, "I was troubled until I received your message an hour ago."

"My message an hour ago? What was it, James?"

"The man said that you had directed him to tell me that you would leave on the early train on the National road in the morning and to have everything packed and in readiness. That was correct, was it not?"

"Oh, entirely so, entirely so!" And he thought to himself, "Surely this woman meddles strangely in my affairs."

It was not until the following evening, however, that he did leave Mexico, but he was not sorry when the train bore him away and he was homeward bound.

* * * * * * * *

When Burr Pendleton was in the act of ascending the steps to the entrance of his favorite club in New York, he encountered a gentleman who was just taking his departure. They paused, mutually and agreeably surprised, and, after having exchanged greetings which gave evidence that they were more than ordinary friends, Pendleton drew the other back into the house, where they sought a quiet corner by themselves.

"Yes, I have returned, Craig. It is really I," was Pendleton's smiling reply to a question asked by his friend.

"Do you realize, old fellow," returned his friend, "that you are more than two weeks overdue and that not a word has been heard from you in that time?"

"Certainly. Circumstances over which I had no control—unavoidable delays, unintentional negligence and all that, you know. The fact is, Wyndham, I had a duel on my hands, and I did not care to let you know about it. You see, I made all arrangements in case I should not be able to return at all, which, I confess, seemed at one time more than likely, and I thought if I did not come back it would be time enough to tell you when I arrived, as it is."

Craig Wyndham calmly lighted a fresh cigar before he ventured a comment on the statement of his friend; then, rather to Pendleton's surprise, he did not refer directly to the subject. Instead he asked quietly:

"Had it to do with the business that took you there?"

"Not at all, not at all, I assure you."

"Then won't you tell me about the business. The duel can wait."

"I can tell you about the business in two words—I succeeded."

"Then you are glad you went?"

"Most certainly. The fact is, Craig, I should have gone there long ago or sent you, as I talked of doing. I think the trip has been good for me in more ways than one. It surely has performed one miracle, for I have discovered that I still have left sufficient energy to do things if I only work myself up to the proper pitch. I left this Mexican business altogether too long. I should have attended to it immediately after the death of the gov'nor. It would have been easier and better, and I think the people down there would have understood things better. However, I fancy it is all right now."

"You fancy? I thought you said you had succeeded."

"So I have—perfectly, entirely, utterly, in every way but one, and that one is apparently unimportant. I have brought back a mystery, and I hate mysteries, as you know."

"Is the mystery connected with the business?"

"Yes and no.

"That reply is ambiguous, Burr. Of course I possess ordinary curiosity. Naturally I would like to hear all about all that you will tell me, but you must remember that I was left in ignorance of many points in this affair of yours, and I do not like to ask questions."

Pendleton waited a moment before replying. Then he tossed away his cigar and took a turn up and down the room. Reseating himself, he said slowly:

"Briefly, then, I will say this, for the present—the duel, as you say, can wait; in fact, it came mighty near waiting anyhow: You know, ever since the gov'nor died I have felt that I ought to take this trip, and you also know that the only reason why I did not do so was my own consummate laziness. I wanted you to go there for me, and you consented to do so. But, Craig, I could not bring myself to tell you all that was necessary for you to know. If you had undertaken the trip simply because I a[illegible] it, I would have felt that I was [illegible]eping faith with my dead father [illegible]u knew or ought to have known, and, I believe, did know, that my hesitation did not arise from any reluctance to take you into my confidence."

"The [illegible]ten injunctions that the gov'nor left for me—you remember that I did not get home until three days after his death—imposed the obligation of silence upon me with considerable emphasis; that is, silence up to a certain point, after which I could, of course, exercise my own discretion. That point could not be reached until I had made a personal investigation, a thing that he practically ordered me to do. Well, I have made it. The obligation of silence is upon me no longer. I can see no reason for keeping still now In fact, the time has come when I must tell somebody, and naturally you are the one whom I have selected for a confidant. More than that, I feel the need of advice and help, and you are the only one I know to whom I am willing to apply. There is not time and this is no place for me to go into details, but if you will give up this evening to me in my rooms—well, we'll have it out to the end. It is a mighty strange thing, Craig, that a man can leave behind him when he dies a tangle which involves two families and which may yet involve two nations in trouble, but that is precisely what my father did. Not only that, but I have permitted these years since his death to roll past, never dreaming that the matter could take the serious shape it has. I regard myself as rather a guilty party as things are situated now, for I cannot help believing if I had attended to matters at once much that is now unavoidable might have been prevented. I believed the old man was deceived—that he imagined a great deal, but I found—well, wait until tonight, and I will tell you what I discovered."

"I think, old man," said Wyndham deliberately, while he drummed the burning end of his cigar upon the ash receiver—"I think that perhaps, having returned from a long trip and being naturally delighted upon meeting an old friend, you may be inclined to place too much confidence in him. Let us revert to the part of the business that I understood before you went away, which, as I remember, related only to property. Did you find the property that your father directed you to recover? Have you brought back the title to it, so that it is undeniably yours? Have you fulfilled that part of the obligation that rested upon you?"

"Entirely, yes."

"Then it seems to me that ends it."

"How so, Craig?"

"Why, that is all that I supposed I had anything to do with."

"You are right. It is." Pendleton made this last remark between the intermittent flaming of a cigar which at that moment he was engaged in lighting. When he cast the match aside, he left the table with some haste and intercepted a gentleman who was at that moment passing. They talked together several moments and then disappeared in the direction of the club cafe, and Wyndham, supposing he would soon return, waited, but when an hour had passed and he was still alone his patience was exhausted.

He summoned the waiter and, having signed the necessary check, asked the name of the man whom Pendleton had intercepted, for he remembered that the waiter had been standing near them at the moment.

"He is a club guest, sir," replied the waiter. "I do not remember his name. I think, sir, that he presented his card only yesterday."

Wyndham strolled through several parts of the club after that, believing that he might encounter Pendleton, and at last, convinced that he was no longer in the house, he applied at the desk, only to be told that Mr. Pendleton had gone out more than an hour before and had left no word.

"Tell him when he returns," said Wyndham, "that I found it impossible to wait longer, but that I will keep the appointment for tonight."

He stood near until the clerk made the memorandum, and then, with knitted brows and thoughtful mien, he took his departure.

The relations between him and Pendleton were twofold in character. They had been intimate friends since the day of their first meeting at college, and when years afterward Wyndham's fortunes had not proved to be all that he expected he became by adaptation more than through engagement a sort of alter ego for his rich friend. Pendleton was tall and dark and, as he frequently admitted, lazy. Wyndham was big and fair, somewhat uncouth when in juxtaposition with his more elegant friend, possessed of prodigious strength and tireless energy. Thus it naturally came about that he "did things" for Pendleton, and this relation grew stronger between them as time went on until the management of Pendleton's affairs had fallen unconsciously, it seemed, almost entirely into Wyndham's hands.

For these services there was no recompense given or received—that is, there was nothing in the shape of a stated salary. At times it was Pendleton's habit to deposit a check for a considerable sum to Wyndham's credit at the bank where he kept an account. When that had occurred several times, always under protest from Wyndham, Pendleton had discovered a way out of the dilemma.

"Look here, Craig," he said to him one day more than a year before his departure for Mexico, "I wish that you would do me a great favor."

"I'll try, Burr. What is it?" was the reply.

"You possess such [illegible]ustible surplus of energy th[illegible] I could induce you to devote it all to me."

"How do you mean?"

is all right, if you are too fat; and all wrong, if too thin already.

Fat, enough for your habit, is healthy; a little more, or less, is no great harm. Too fat, consult a doctor; too thin, persistently thin, no matter what cause, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil.

There are many causes of getting too thin; they all come under these two heads: overwork and under-digestion.

Stop over-work, if you can; but, whether you can or not, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, to balance yourself with your work. You can't live on it—true—but, by it, you can. There's a limit, however; you'll pay for it

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the readiest cure for "can't eat," unless it comes of your doing no work—you can't long be well and strong, without some sort of activity.

Don't think of going anywhere else for clover, timothy or alsyke seed, if you want the best I have it.

C. A. Slayton.

Friday evening Mr. and Mrs. Lafe Stevenson celebrated the third anniversary of their marriage. The celebration was held at their home on Maumee street. A very pleasant evening was spent in cards and other games after which the guests were ushered to the dining room where an elaborate supper awaited them. The out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Clark, of Detroit.

Farmers, we sell clover, timothy, alsyke, field peas etc., at right prices. Call and get samples before buying.

SHOWING PLAINLY

That Tecumseh People are Disgusted with the Antics of "Mark Hanna," "Poo Bah" and "Follow-along."

The result of the village election was a matter of plain laughter even to the candidates who were defeated. Even in the "triumvurate" there was a misunderstanding. Hawkins knew nothing of the caucus call until several days after the notices were up and it was plainly the work of the ex oil inspector, but then after a few more years he may learn something.

A ticket of good men was elected as would have been the case had the result been the other way.

Little Lord Fauntleroy.

No play ever written is better known or more popular than Mrs. Burnett's famous story, "Little Lord Fauntleroy." At one time there were a dozen companies all playing this drama and all highly successful. It set the world a talking and many people were made happy by seeing it.

To-day there is but one child playing this part and she is Baby Claman and she will be seen here next Saturday night in Fauntleroy. She has been receiving an ovation everywhere for her wonderful talent displayed. A most winsome little creature who has not been spoiled by the attentions showered on her, to see her is love her. The play will be presented in an adequate manner by a clever company of ten people and they have been praised very highly by the state papers.

The prices have been fixed at a very low figure, 10, 15 and 25c. A childrens matinee will be given Saturday afternoon. Admission to matinee 10c.

RUN-AWAY HORSES

Cannot Run When They are Around.

Occasionally, even in a town like Winfield, where deeds of valor are not as frequent as they were in the days when the cowboy rode up and down the principal streets of the town shooting out window lights, a man is afforded the opportunity of showing the kind of metal of which he is made.

Yesterday on the streets there came such an opportunity, and the hero was Fred Waring, of Michigan, who is visiting a friend in the city, and the incident was a runaway.

The team of R. B. Carson hitched to a heavy wagon came thundering down Ninth avenue from the east. At the junction of Ninth and Main a young man shot out from the crowd and grasped the bit of the near horse. He was swept from his feet in an instant, but his sudden dash succeeded in turning the horses' heads up Main street. Checked at first by the sudden dash which Waring had made, the horses again assumed their mad run, but this time somewhat handicapped by the human weight hanging to the head of the near horse. This had a tendency to make the team swerve to the west, and by the time they had run a block north, the heroic young man had them turned into the sidewalk and stopped.

The owner of the team was pursuing on a dead run and caught up a moment after the team was stopped. His joy at Waring's valor was so great that he actually hugged him. The crowd on Main street who saw the act gave the young man a glad hand.—Winfield, Kansas, Courier.

The Vested Choir.

Many people attended the evening service at the Episcopal church Sunday, the attraction being a vested choir. About thirty members in their vestments filled the choir pews, the interior of the church having been arranged so that the choir could occupy both sides of the pulpit. A vested choir is quite a novelty to church going people of Tecumseh and will no doubt prove a drawing card for the Episcopal church.

WHAT THEY SAY

About the Recent Herald Office Fire

The HERALD office at Tecumseh had a $300 fire Monday, still Bro. Stacy issued his paper nearly on time.—Reese Review.

The HERALD office was the scene of a stubborn fire Monday morning that came near licking up the whole plant. The fire department and citizens took hold in earnest at once and finally after hard work succeeded in saving the plant and building with a loss of only about $500 which was covered by insurance. The fire started down stairs in a room used for storing waste paper, though it is not known how it happened. The office of the Hammond Lumber Co. was put into commission as a temporary print shop and the paper came out the next day with one edge slightly schorched. Messrs. Stacy and Field are to be congratulated that they escaped with as little damage.—Clinton Local.

Fire was discovered in the HERALD office at 8 o'clock this morning by some of the young ladies at work there, and for a time there was some tall hustling before the flames were subdued. The fire started under the paper cutter where the scraps of paper fell through an opening into the basement. The fire department was called out, and soon squelched the flames. The damage was small, the water doing more damage to the floor and goods than the flames. The origin of the fire is a mystery, but it is supposed to have been caused by spontaneous combustion. All the spring poetry was saved, and the office towel still stands against the wall.—Adrian Times.

The Tecumseh HERALD office was badly scorched by fire last Monday morning. It is thought to have been occassioned by spontaneous combustion in a pile of paper cuttings. The fire department worked about two hours before the flames were subdued. The fire was mostly in the cellar, and it was necessary to flood the floors with water to extinguish it. It was a sorry sight, but the loss was not as great as was anticipated, being estimated at about $500 on material and stock.—Hudson Post.

The Tecumseh HERALD newspaper and Job Office was damaged by fire Monday morning; the fire caught in same waste paper in the basement and came near destroying the plant. Prompt work by the fire department saved the building. The loss is divided between Geo. Stacy publisher of the HERALD, and Geo. Field, who has charge of the Job Department. The loss is covered by insurance.—Blissfield Advance.

Fire in the office of the Tecumseh HERALD Monday, damaged that printery to the extent of about $500. The flames were subdued before the building or stock were very badly burned, the principal part of the damage resulting from the great volume of water poured into the burning structure by the fire department. The loss was fully covered by insurance, and Mr. Stacy will continue to publish the HERALD just the same as though nothing had happened.—Hudson Gazette.

Fire broke out in the HERALD newspaper office about 9 o'clock this morning, starting in the basement. The smoke in the cellar was so dense that the department was unable to get at the flames until they had obtained great headway. After two hours of hard work the fire was under control. The building was badly damaged and the furniture, fixtures, type etc. nearly ruined. The job printing office in the rear of the newspaper office, recently purchased by Geo. Field, escaped with but little damage to type and paper stock. The losses in both offices were fully covered by insurance. The cause of the fire is unknown. The HERALD will print its usual edition to-morrow.—Free Press.

NEW YORK ENTERTAINS HIM.

Prince Henry Attends Various Social Functions.

New York, March 10.—Prince Henry of Prussia was the central figure Sunday in another relief of entertainment arranged in his honor. He first listened to a concert at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel, largely made up of his favorite American songs, the concert being arranged at his request. When that was over he drove to the University club to a luncheon, which was not concluded until mid-afternoon. In the evening he was the guest at dinner of Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt and met a large party made up of persons of social prominence. When the prince bade farewell to the company at the Vanderbilt home he went to the New York Yacht club for an informal reception, and the hour was late when he returned to the Waldorf-Astoria for the night. He found time between the four main events on his program for the day to receive a delegation representing the Commercial club of St. Paul and several callers, and to finally complete the arrangements for the last two days stay in the country and his departure for home. He had intended to be present at the religious service on the imperial yacht Hohenzollern in the morning, but the case of scarlet fever which developed there several days ago altered that plan. Instead he remained at the hotel, arising late and breakfasting at his leisure.

Berlin, March 10.—Some of the daily papers have begun summing up Prince Henry's trip in the United States. Their tone is one of complete satisfaction. They declare the prince's trip was never intended to have any specific political aims, but merely purposed to bring about an improvement in the popular feeling in both countries.

The National Zeitung says that Princ Henry and the Americans have learned to understand and appreciate each other, and that the result attained is out of the common. It is a not-to-be-forgotten incident, says this paper, in the busy rush of modern life.

QUIET WEEK PREDICTED.

Subsidy and R. D. F. Bills Yet to Be Disposed Of.

Washington, March 10.—The attention of the senate will be divided again this week between the ship subsidy bill and the bill providing for the punishment of persons who assault or kill the president of the United States, the former holding the place of unfinished business and the latter coming in for consideration when there is no one prepared to speak on the subsidy question. Among those who have announced their intention to speak on the subsidy bill is Senator Vest, but the condition of his health, which remains far from robust, may prevent his addressing the senate. Senator Mallory also will talk on this subject, but beyond these no set addresses have been announced. However, there undoubtedly will be a number of short speeches on the bill. No prepared speeches on the presidential assault bill have been announced, but there is no doubt the lawyers of the senate will continue to find more or less to say about it whenever opportunity shall offer. At odd times the calendar will be taken up. Altogether, the week does not promise to be an exciting one in the senate.

The house this week, after disposing of the bill to classify the rural free delivery service and place the carriers under the contract system, will devote its attention to appropriation bills. The postoffice appropriation bill, which will be taken up first, probably will require three days. It will be followed by the river and harbor bill. It is regarded as a foregone conclusion that the rural free delivery bill will be defeated when the vote is taken today.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

By local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Halls' Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Weeping Trees.

The literature of "weeping trees" is enormous, much of it being plainly mythical, but there is a large basis of fact upon which most of these marvelous stories rest. Many travelers have described the famous "rain tree" of Padradoca, Isle of Ferro. John Cockburn in 1735 described a tree at Vera Pas, Central America, from which pure water continually dripped from every leaf and branch.

Grief and Thrift.

Thomas Bailey Aldrich once received a pathetic letter in a feminine hand announcing the death of a little daughter and asking if he would not send in his own handwriting a verse or two from "Babie Bell" to assuage the grief of the household.

Aldrich sent the whole poem and not long after saw it displayed in the shop of an autograph dealer, with a good, round price attached thereto.

The Old Man's Advantages.

A man past fifty can do with less sleep than younger men. He can endure greater steady and prolonged strain. He can bear his burden day after day with less need of recreation. The young man can "sprint," but he cannot "stay" like the man with brain grown iron and nerves steel by many years of training.

Elderly men are less temptable. They are of fixed moral habit. Appetite and passion are under control. For better or for worse they are a calculable quantity, with slight variations to be taken into account.

Elderly men are more loyal as friends if they are friends. Their attachment to a cause or a commercial house is less changeable. They have, moreover, given bonds for good behavior in the persons of grown families whose respect is to them dearer than life. They know the difficulty of repairing mistakes.

Elderly men actually have experience. The older man best reads character. He is the wisest to select agents. —Washington Times.

Nebraska "Bug Eaters."

A Nebraska judge was asked how it was that the citizens of his state were nicknamed "bug eaters."

"The name is applied to us sometimes in the east," answered the judge frankly. "It originated many years ago in a peculiar way, incident to a speech. Back in 1874 a swarm of grasshoppers descended upon our fair state and despoiled everything. Crops were swept away before this army of insects, and the people were left destitute. An appeal went up for aid, and some of our eloquent Nebraskans journeyed east to plead our cause. One of these eloquent citizens in a flight of speech declared that the voracious grasshoppers had even eaten the tires off wagon wheels and were devouring the railroad tracks. 'Why, our people have nothing but grasshoppers and bugs,' was the climax of this orator's speech!" exclaimed the judge.

"And now you have the history of the sobriquet of 'bug eaters,'" he concluded.—Washington Post.

An Old Superstition.

Superstition connected with the seventh child of a seventh child is commemorated by a tombstone in a village churchyard near Bridgewater, Somerset. This inscription runs: "Sacred to the memory of Doctress Anne Pounsberry, who departed this life Dec. 11, 1813, aged seventy-three years. Stand still and consider the wondrous works of God." Doctress was not merely an epithet, but a baptismal name, for she was a seventh daughter of a seventh daughter and was therefore credited with powers of healing. She practiced in herbs and charms. For king's evil this was her prescription: "Take the legs of a toad. Bake and grind them to powder with pestle and mortar. Place the powder in a bag around the neck of the sufferer."—London Chronicle.

Antiquity of Glass.

So far as research has been able to determine glass was in use 2,000 years before the birth of Christ and was even then not in its infancy by any manner of means. In the Slade collection at the British museum there is the head of a lion molded in glass, bearing the name of an Egyptian king of the eleventh dynasty. This is the oldest specimen of pure glass bearing anything like a date now known to exist. The invention now known as "bleezing," the mode of varnishing pottery with a thin film of glass, is believed to date back to the first Egyptian dynasty. Proof of this is found in the pottery beads, glass glazed, found in the tombs of the age above referred to.

Robert Toombs' Advice.

A lawyer sent to Robert Toombs once and asked what he should charge a client in a case to which Mr. Toombs had just listened in the courthouse. "Well," said Toombs, "I should charge $1,000, but you ought to have $5,000, for you did a great many things that I would not have done."

Life Guards.

The Life Guards are two regiments of cavalry forming part of the British household troops. They are gallant soldiers, and every loyal British heart is proud of them. Not only the king's household, but yours, ours, everybody's should have it's life guards. The need of them is especially great when the greatest foes of life, diseases, find allies in the very elements, as colds, influenza, catarrh, the grip and pneumonia do in the stormy month of March. The best way that we know of to guard against these diseases is to strengthen the system with Hood's Sarsaparilla—the greatest of all life guards. It removes the conditions in which those diseases make their most successful attack, gives vigor and tone to all the vital organs and functions, and imparts a genial warmth to the blood. Remember the weaker the system the greater the exposure to disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the system strong.

Classical Cannibal.

"But why," asked the subchief of the cannibal isles, "do you insist upon having the man who fell while leading the charge against us served up at the banquet this evening? He seems to be hard as nails."

"Huh!" answered the chief of the cannibal isles. "I read in a book of poetry left by our last meal that 'the bravest are the tenderest.'"—Baltimore American.

Don't Sneer.

Never bring a human being, however silly, ignorant and weak—above all, any little child—to shame and confusion of face. Never, by petulance, by suspicion, by ridicule, even by selfish and silly haste—never, above all, by indulging in the brutal pleasure of a sneer, crush what is finest and rouse up what is coarsest in the heart of any fellow creature.

Hint Proof.

A woman visiting in town complains that she has been moved from the guestroom to a back bedroom and from there to sleep three in a bed with the children. She wouldn't see a hint if it were tied on her mirror with blue ribbon.—Atchison Globe.

IF WOMEN ONLY KNEW.

What a Heap of Happiness It Would Bring to Tecumseh Homes.

Hours of misery at leisure or at work.

If women only knew the cause;

Backache pains come from sick kidneys.

Doan's Kidney Pills will cure it.

Tecumseh people endorse this.

Mrs. J. W. Owen, wife of the well-known carpenter, living in the southeastern section of Tecumseh, says: "I am very well pleased with Doan's Kidney Pills. I procured a box at C. A. Wright's drug store and they did me a lot of good. I had heart trouble and my kidneys did not perform their proper duties. This condition existed for some time. I tried different remedies which were recommended to me but received little if any benefit from them. I will cheerfully say this for Doan's Kidney Pills. I received more permanent relief from their use than from any other medicine I ever used. I am pleased to testify in their value."

MISPRINT SOMEWHERE.

Peculiar Juggling of State Moneys Discovered.

Lansing, Mich., March 8.—A recent examination of the auditor-general's books for the purpose of determining the several amounts reimbursed to the state by the general government on account of Michigan's war claims of 1861-5, disclosed a discrepancy of $43,845.95 between the amount charged the state treasurer for these reimbursements and the amount shown to have been paid the state according to the books of the United States.

This discrepancy occurred in 1884. The government books show that $43,845.95 was paid to the state on account of this claim in 1884, but the state's books do not show that a dollar was received into the state treasury that year.

It was, however, further discovered that, in 1884 Gov. Begole received $31,759.45 on account of this claim and turned it over to the quartermaster-general. This exceptional treatment of moneys reimbursed by the United States to the state practically removed the distinction between the executive and legislative branches of our government.

Of the entire amount of $424,078.60 reimbursed by the general government on the state's war claim, all but this item of $43,845.95 was turned into the state treasury and its use made subject to legislative action.

As previously stated, the amount reimbursed in 1884, as shown by the government books, was $43,845.95, but only $31,759.45 of this sum was turned over to the military department by the governor. It is supposed that the difference, $12,086.50, was the compensation received by Friend Palmer of Detroit, who acted as agent for the state in making the collection.

Was Dying, Not Drunk.

Alma, Mich., March 8.—Omer Dallas committed suicide here Thursday night by taking carbolic acid. He had been drinking heavily all day, and on going home abused his wife so that she sent for an officer. The officer, on his arrival, found Dallas lying stupefied in his barn, but supposing that he was merely drunk, left him there. Later his brother-in-law found him dead, a vial labeled carbolic acid and a partly empty whisky bottle telling the story. Dallas was about 30 years old, with no children.

A Mother's Sad Death.

Alpena, Mich., March 8.—Mrs. Wm. Strutts has been quarantined with her six young children, who have been ill with diphtheria for some time. The strain of caring for the children proved too much for her, and while serving dinner to them yesterday she fell to the floor and expired in a few moments from heart disease. No one was allowed to enter the house to care for the children except the undertaker. The body of the dead woman was given immediate burial.

Mother Horribly Burned.

Muskegon, Mich., March 8.—Mrs. Jennie Schalk was horribly burned by the explosion of a kerosene lamp. The woman was carrying her baby and had the lamp in her hand. The burning oil flew all over her. She dropped the baby and rushed into the street, the flames mounting above her head. The inmates of the house extinguished the flames, but she was so badly burned that she will probably die. Her husband died about three months ago.

Michigan Was Defeated.

Philadelphia, March 8.—The University of Pennsylvania won the debate with the University of Michigan last night. The contest was very close, two judges deciding in Pennsylvania and one in favor of Michigan. The subject of debate was: "Resolved, That a system of compulsory voting should be adopted." Pennsylvania had the affirmative. There were three men on each team.

Question Answered.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Get Green's Prize Almanac at J. J. Orr's.

OFF FOR GERMANY

H. R. H. Prince Henry Is Now Journeying Home.

ON STEAMER DEUTSCHLAND

Employed His Last Hours Receiving Farewell Calls—Exchanged Parting Words With the President By Telegran

New York, March 12.—Prince Henry of Prussia sailed for Germany on board the Hamburg-American liner Deutschland Tuesday afternoon. His last day in America was spent entirely on board the Deutschland, but it was well filled with pleasing incidents.

The prince breakfasted early, and about 10 o'clock began to receive official farewell visits, including representatives of Germany in this country and those of the United States government. Mayor Low of New York was also a caller on the prince, bidding him farewell, and gave a hint that he had some intention of returning to America for a second visit.

The members of the party that accompanied the prince on his tour were his guests at luncheon. Covers were laid for 28 persons in the dining-room of the steamship, and music was furnished by the band from the Hohenzollern. At the close of the luncheon, when it came time to say good-bye, the prince, taking a rose from the table, said:

"This is the badge of that which I have been admiring during my entire trip to the Nnited States—American beauty."

He placed the flower in his button-hole and each guest followed his example.

Immediately after the luncheon, at the prince's invitation, the party went to the commander's bridge of the Deutschland and was there photographed. Then the real leave-taking began. The final farewells were said by members of the German embassy at Washington.

An incident of the forenoon was the call of the committee of 40 New York letter carriers, representing the New York branch of the National Letter Carriers' association. They came to present the prince with a bronze tablet in commemoration of the martyred presidents of the United States—Lincoln, Garfield and McKinley.

Shortly before the Deutschland sailed the United Singing Societies of Hudson county, New Jersey, appeared on the deck of the Princess Victoria Louise, which lay alongside the Deutschland and sang a number of selections.

The Deutschland sailed at 3:45. As she moved away from the pier the cheering was continuous. The prince appeared on the bridge and bowed.

Before departure, President Roosevelt and the Prince exchanged a parting farewell by telegram. The latter's message in part said:

"I beg to thank you personally, as well as the nation whose guest I have been, for all the kindness, consideration and good feeling I have met with during my visit to your interesting country. I hope that my visit may have increased the feelings of friendship between the country I represent and the United States."

In his reply, the president said:

"I wish to express to you the pleasure it has been to see you and the real good I think your visit has done in promoting a feeling of friendship between Germany and the United States. It is my most earnest wish that this feeling may strengthen steadily."

Her Ladyship Got Drunk.

London, March 12.—Lady Christiania Sykes, whose domestic difficulties have caused notoriety, was arrested on the Strand last night on the charge of being drunk and incapable of taking care of herself. She was arraigned at the Bow street police court this morning; but her ladyship laughingly pleaded illness and the magistrate released her, with a warning not to come before him again. Lady Christinia (Jessie) Sykes is about 46 years of age and a daughter of the late Right Hon. George Augustus Cavendish-Bentinck and a relative of the Duke of Portland. She was married in 1873 to Sir Tatton Sykes, a wealthy Yorkshire baronet, 29 years her senior. Her ladyship became prominent on the turf and on the stock exchange. Early in December, 1896, her husband advertised that he could no longer be responsible for her debts. Since that time Lady Sykes has been several times in court on charges of financial irregularities. Last year she and Sir Tatton agreed to a friendly separation, her ladyship being given a yearly allowance of $25,000.

Wilcox Killed Nell Cropsey.

Elizabeth City, N. C., March 12.—The grand jury of Pasquotank county has found a true bill against James Wilcox, the young man in jail here charged with killing his sweetheart, Miss Nellie Cropsey, last November. The indictment charges that on the 20th day of November, 1901, Wilcox wilfully and with malice aforethought, killed and murdered Ellen M. Cropsey. Wilcox was arraigned and entered a plea of not guilty. The court drew a special venire of 250 jurors and then announced that the trial would begin at 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon. While in court, Wilcox was very solemn and quiet. His face bore a haggard look. The large court room was packed and excitement was high.

A JOKE ON MORSE

Game Warden Was Arrested in Kalamazoo.

IN JAIL SEVERAL HOURS

Few Drinks on Empty Stomach Upset Him—Was Searching for His Son—Woman in Three Rivers Furnishes Information.

Kalamazoo, Mich., March 13.—State Game and Fish Warden Grant M. Morse of Portland was an inmate of the Kalamazoo jail for several hours yesterday on the charge of drunkenness. Morse arrived in Kalamazoo Wednesday morning searching for his son, who mysteriously disappeared from the Michigan Agricultural college recently. He came to Kalamazoo, thinking perhaps he might be able to obtain some clue to the boy's whereabouts. He had had no breakfast, was tired, he said, and took a few drinks, which, owing to the condition of his stomach, he said, went quickly to his head "and considerably confused him."

Morse was arrested by a policeman who did not know the state game warden from any other citizen who might have had too much to drink. He quickly gathered in his wardenship and hurried him off to jail, where he remained until 3 p. m., when he was released by orders of Chief Greenfield.

Morse's identity was not discovered until some time after he had been arrested, but as soon as it was really known who he was, there was some tall hustling done and the prisoner soon released, Deputy Game Warden Brockie being very active in behalf of his chief.

Lansing, Mich., March 13.—Game Warden Morse has employed Detective Abels of this city to institute a search for his son, Leon Morse, who disappeared from the Agricultural college a fortnight ago. The only clue thus far obtained came Tuesday in the form of a letter from a woman in Three Rivers, who informed the father that a young man closely resembling the description of his son applied at her home for something to eat last week Friday. Investigation showed that the woman was entirely reputable and Warden Morse has gone to Three Rivers to follow up the clue.

Defaulter Thompson Arrested.

Port Huron, Mich., March 13.—The climax in the defalcation of C. D. Thompson, formerly supreme finance keeper of the supreme tent, Maccabees of the world, came at noon yesterday, when Thompson was arrested on nine counts. He was arraigned before Judge Wagner, and refused to plead. Bail was fixed at $5,000, with two sureties, Frank J. Hays, a lumberman, and Frank J. Haslett, a tailor. Neither Maccabee officials nor the supreme tent have had anything to do with Mr. Thompson's arrest, as the complaint was made by Sheriff Harrison W. Maines, to Prosecuting Attorney Cady, and the arrest and credit for the same belongs to them. The Maccabee officials have been scored for their laxity in the matter, but Tuesday Maines made the complaint to Prosecuting Attorney Cady on information and belief. Several days ago a subpena was issued for George J. Siegle, supreme record-keeper, and he brought his books and testified under oath before Judge Wagner, and it was on the information secured from this source that Sheriff Maines made his complaint.

Big Dock for St. Joseph.

St. Joseph, Mich., March 13.—For the last five years it has been freely hinted that the Big Four system, terminating in this city on the north side of the St. Joseph river, intending to develop its property and dockage fronting on the canal. During the last two years the officials of that railroad have made many visits to this city, but their intention was not known definitely until yesterday, when it was announced that the system would construct a big receiving dock in St. Joseph.

CYCLONE IN TEXAS

Dallas County Suffers Great Damages.

PERSONS KILLED AND INJURED

Houses Were Demolished—Terrible Downpour of Rain—Extent of Damages Believed Will Amount to One Hundred Thousand Dollars.

Dallas, Tex., March 12.—A cyclone has swept through the southern suburbs of Dallas and passed on toward the northeast, levelling fences and destroying small farm buildings in its path. The extent of damage to persons and property in the farming district has not been learned, as the terrific downpour of rain has put country roads in an almost impassable condition.

Telephone reports state that at De Soto, 14 miles from Dallas, three dwelling houses and two stores, including the postoffice, were demolished. One of the dwelling houses destroyed was that of J. M. Johnson. His four-year-old daughter was so badly injured that she died last evening. Three miles east of Dallas, the dwelling house of T. D. Reagan was wrecked. The family escaped without injury. In Queen City, the extreme southern suburb of Dallas, six dwelling houses were blown to pieces by the wind. Mrs. George Bray received fatal injuries. Mr. Bray and children were seriously injured. C. D. Bourne, wife and child, and Albert Ewing and family were away from home. Their house was literally torn to pieces and a negro servant, whose name was not learned, was badly hurt. A score or more of other houses were badly damaged, but not wrecked. The property loss, as near as can be estimated in Dallas county, will reach at least $100,000.

Omaha Swept by Tornado.

Omaha, Neb., March 12.—A storm from the northwest swept through the northern portion of Omaha at 1 o'clock Tuesday. Light rain and hail were followed by a veritable hurricane, which did a great amount of damage. Wires were blown down, windows shattered, several buildings unroofed and sidewalks torn up. Five skylights, each weighing more than 500 pounds, were blown down at the Coliseum building. The Monmouth Park M. E. church, at Thirty-fourth street and Larimore avenue, was blown to pieces, as was the building at 2218 Cumming street, occupied by the Rutherford Marble works. The roof at 2410 and 2412 Cumming street was blown to the street. At the same time a bolt of lightning struck the flat at 2410 Cumming, shattering the rear portion of the building. A row of flats across the street from the Coliseum was badly damaged. So far as known no one was seriously injured.

Why Germany Delays.

Washington, March 12.—It is true, as reported from Pekin, that the influence of the American government has been extended to secure the early withdrawal of foreign troops from Tien Tsin. Having withdrawn our own troops, our government can do nothing further in that direction than to use moral suasion with the other powers. It is stated here that this has been effective to the extent that every one of the powers has assented to the proposition to withdraw the troops, even Germany, which is now represented as halting. While there have been no very recent exchanges on this subject, a few weeks ago the German government was sounded and readily responded that it intended to withdraw its troops as soon as it had secured what it regarded as necessary guarantees, and had satisfied itself that disorder would not follow, to the jeopardy of foreigners in Tien Tsin. It is understood here, therefore, that the question is simply one of judgment as to the time of withdrawal. The United States, with most of the other powers, believes that the time is now; the German government is delaying for the reasons specified.

DIDN'T COMMIT THEMSELVES.

Jury Did Not Say Klump Killed His Wife.

Lowell, Mich., March 12.—The coroner's inquest here yesterday failed to develop any new features in the mystery surrounding the death of Mrs. William E. Klump, who died Sunday from the effects of a poisoned headache powder. After hearing the evidence of the chemist who analyzed the powder, and that of several women who were present at the Klump home on the day of the woman's death, the jury retired and brought in the following verdict:

"Mrs. Ada Klump came to her death from strychnine, sent Mrs. Klump through the mail by persons unknown, the envelope containing it being delivered to her by her husband."

The authorities are still holding Klump, and report one new development in the discovery of the mysterious "J. Portmus" who accompanied Klump on his trip to Grand Rapids two weeks ago. A deputy has been sent to effect the man's arrest.

THE KNIFE THROWERS

By FREDERIC VAN RENSSELAER DEY,
Author of "Not Like Other Men," Etc.

Copyright, 1901, by Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey.

"Why, just come regularly into my employ as—what is it that kings and queens have about them?"

"Fools principally. I think I'm not up to that, Burr."

"Keeper of the privy purse; that's what I mean. Suppose you look out for my accounts, pay my bills and, in short, attend to everything for me, so that I will not have to think of anything unless I want to. Don't you see—sign my checks for me and attend to the small matters of life, so that I will not have them to think of? That is what I want. You can do as you please concerning salary. You can fix the amount, subject, of course, to my approval"—he looked away while he said that—"or when you feel that you need some money you can draw a check for what you want and charge it to your account."

Wyndham raised his head in preparation of a protest, but for once Pendleton's energy got the best of him.

"I won't hear of an objection," he said somewhat harshly. "Either you agree to my proposition or I engage somebody else to do the work that I have asked you to do. If you are my friend, as you pretend to be, you will accept, but if you have any more of your foolish ideas of pride standing in the way it is time that we found it out and—quit. Either you accept or we part here, Craig. You put me in the position of the pleader, and I have never pleaded for anything in my life. If I did not want you, I certainly should not ask you. If you will assume the responsibility of my affairs and relieve me of them entirely, in addition to the labor you will perform, you will confer a very great favor. You ought to understand that I could not place this responsibility upon any man whom I do not know."

The discussion was ended. The matter was arranged to the mutual satisfaction of the contracting parties, and Wyndham became to all intents and purposes the mentor of his friend. It is true that Pendleton carried a private checkbook of his own for personal use in case of emergency and that a very comfortable sum was kept to that account; but, nevertheless, it had to be drawn from the other one and over the signature of Wyndham.

This was the state of things when the friends encountered each other on the steps of the club on the afternoon of the arrival of Pendleton from Mexico; and there were other things that had grown out of the arrangement which Wyndham longed for an opportunity to explain, but which the other man never gave him the opportunity to do.

There are men who carry burdens which are never seen or suspected. Wyndham was one of them. Burdens which rightly belonged to him he did not mind, but burdens that he bore for another oppressed him really more than he knew. He was the most undemonstrative fellow in the world. Persons for whom he felt the most profound affection were the least likely of all others to observe signs of it, and when he left the club that afternoon after the unexplained departure, and in some ways the inexcusable negligence, of Pendleton it seemed to him that he bore a burden that it was next to impossible for him to carry. That was why his brow was creased with thought, and that was also why he did not see that a pair of dark skinned strangers followed in his footsteps and never once lost sight of him until he disappeared three hours later through the doorway that led to the apartments of his friend Pendleton.

James, Pendleton's valet, replied to the touch of the electric bell. He was fond of Wyndham, for he knew with that instinct which is more animal than human, but which unerringly points out or individualizes those who love the people we love, that Wyndham was devoted to his master. In reply to Wyndham's question he replied:

"Yes, Mr. Wyndham, Mr. Pendleton is in. He is in his room, but left word that he did not care to be disturbed. I am not sure whether I should announce you or not."

"By no means," replied Wyndham. "I will wait. What time did he return?"

"Half past 5, sir."

"Half past 5? Then he must have come directly here from the club?"

"I think so, sir."

Wyndham glanced at his watch. It was nearly 9 o'clock. He waited until the hands pointed at exactly that hour. Then he said to James:

"I think, James, I will ask you to announce me now. Mr. Pendleton expects me. He is tired and is doubtless sleeping. I think he would prefer to be told that I am here."

They went to the door together, James in the lead. He rapped gently upon the panel, turned the knob, pushed the door open gently and stepped aside to allow Wyndham to pass him.

Pendleton was sitting in the depths of a large easy chair that he affected in a far corner of the room, and Wyndham, believing that he had fallen asleep unintentionally, started forward to awaken him, while James remained in the doorway. But he had taken only two or three steps when he paused abruptly.

Pendleton's head had fallen forward on his breast. In the very center of his shirt front just below the point where a single diamond gleamed was an object sticking out. Underneath that was a splash of red, leading downward until it was lost from sight behind the buttoned waistcoat, and Pendleton—Burr Pendleton—before he had been permitted an opportunity to take his friend Wyndham into his confidence, was dead.

CHAPTER IV.

CUNNING AGAINST CUNNING.

CRAIG WYNDHAM discovered while he was still several feet from the body of his friend that he was dead. He saw in that fractional part of an instant the cause of death. With a swiftness of which he was himself unconscious he turned and seized James, drew him from the room and closed the door almost before the valet was aware of the awful thing that had confronted them.

Then, while the strong and relentless arm of his master's friend drew him into the parlor, his old knees began to tremble and threaten to give way beneath him, so that when at last they were in the center of the room, underneath the chandelier, he was weeping and was devoid of what little strength he had possessed.

"Your master is dead, James. Who killed him?" were the first words that Wyndham uttered. He spoke calmly, but his face was deathly white, and he did not realize with what resistless strength he gripped the arm of the old man.

"God help us, sir, I do not know," was the reply. "Let us go to him!"

"No. Remain here. There is no use to go to him now. He is dead—quite dead. Before others are informed of this you must answer some questions for me. After that I will tell you what is best to do. Can you control yourself, James? Here—take some of this brandy. If ever you loved Mr. Pendleton, show it by keeping your wits about you now. Are you sure that it was half past 5 when Mr. Pendleton returned?"

"Positive, sir."

"Why so positive?"

"Because the clock on the mantel had stopped, sir. I asked Mr. Burr for the correct time so that I could set it."

"Was he alone?"

"No, sir. There was a gentleman with him."

"Who was it? Did you know him?"

"I knew his face, sir, but not his name. I have seen him on the street in the City of Mexico."

"Describe him—or, rather, let me try. I believe that I have seen him also. Not as tall as Mr. Pendleton, eh? Quite handsome. Black mustache, black eyes, complexion rather pale for one with such dark eyes and hair. Does that answer?"

"Perfectly, sir."

"Now tell me what they did when they came here together."

"That I do not know, Mr. Wyndham. I did not hear the stranger utter a word. He seated himself in that chair while Mr. Burr went into the room where—where you found him, sir. He came out again a moment later with a bundle of papers that looked like letters in his hand. Then he sent me from the room. Presently he rang for me and ordered some brandy, which I served and again left the room. Nearly an hour later I heard the bell again. Mr. Burr was alone then, although I am sure that I did not hear the stranger when he left the apartment. My master told me what clothes he desired to wear tonight and said that he wished to rest a little while. He then went into his sleeping room and closed the door, and I went out to attend to a commission he had given me. I was not away from the house more than twenty minutes, sir, and when I returned I was surprised to discover that I had left the door which communicates with the hallway on the latch. It was not open, sir, but it was not latched, and I was quite sure that I had closed it when I went out. My idea was that Mr. Pendleton had remembered something else that he wanted and had gone to the door to call me back, but that I did not hear him. That is all, sir—until you came. That is all I know."

The old servant could restrain himself no longer, but sank into a chair, buried his face in his hands and wept. Wyndham strode to the window and let the old man sob on unheeded, while he drummed with the ends of his fingers upon the pane and stared into the darkness.

When James' sobs ceased, Craig Wyndham turned back into the room and, placing one hand gently upon the old man's shoulder, spoke kindly, but with an intensity that had an instant effect. The power of the man shone in his eyes at that moment, and, although his face was pale and drawn, he was outwardly as calm as if nothing untoward had occurred.

"James," he said, "I believe you loved your master very dearly."

"As if he were my own son, sir, or more perhaps. I never had a son, so I do not know."

"You would sacrifice much for him, would you not, James?"

"Everything, sir—life itself, if that could do any good."

"You loved his father also, James?"

"With all my heart, sir."

"Would you be willing, James, in order that justice may be done not only to your dead master, but to his father's memory, and for the sake of the family name, to permit a great shadow to fall upon you for a time?"

"I don't know what you mean, sir," replied James humbly. "I only know that I am willing to do anything that I can do if in doing it I can serve him."

"I believe you, James. Now, listen closely to what I have to say. Your master is dead and by the act of an assassin. A great crime has been committed, and that crime is the result of events that happened long ago. I know something of the history that led to this deed, but my information is very meager. I have no doubt that you are aware of many things connected with this strange history which will assist me to unravel this tangled skein. We will talk of that later. The death of Mr. Pendleton must be reported to the police and to the coroner at once. If we say anything concerning the visit of this stranger and the subsequent open door, as you believed you had closed and latched it, suspicion will point its finger at him, but we cannot say one thing or prove one circumstance to convict him of the crime, and he would therefore escape. By connecting him with the affair at all we would strengthen the position he is in, for you may be sure that he has planned thoroughly to save himself. On the other hand, James, there are those who will suspect you of the crime."

"Suspect me!" he almost shouted.

"Yes, James. If you look at it calmly, you will see that I am right, and, James, that is precisely what I want the world to believe. I want you suspected of this crime, but only for a time."

"But why, sir, why?"

"So that the person who really did it may be thrown off his guard; so that I will have time to work out to the end all of the facts connected with the crime that I now know so little about; so that I may have time to guard against the revelation of things that I am sure Burr Pendleton desired never to be known; so that I may be enabled to fulfill what I know would be his wish were he still alive to direct us what to do, and finally so that I may in the end palsy the hand that struck your master to death. Mr. Pendleton lived in a shadow, James—a shadow of the past. He guarded it jealously, even from me, his closest friend. Now it becomes my duty to work it out until I know all that I am sure he meant to tell me tonight. Lastly, James, there is one reason more vital than all. It is more than probable that suspicion will fall upon me also. I think the man who committed the deed will endeavor to bring that about. If you disappear, thus convincing others that you are guilty, it will leave me free to work; if I am hampered in any way, that fact will play into the hands of the enemies of Mr. Pendleton. Will you do what I wish you to do, James?"

"I will do whatever you think best, Mr. Wyndham," replied the old man simply. "I know that Burr loved you and trusted you more than any other person in the world. Tell me what I am to do, sir, and I will do it."

"Then you must leave the house at once, taking nothing with you. I will write an address upon this card where you are to go. Assume the name of Thomas Judson. Wait; I will write a line for you to take with you."

"Wyndham tore a leaf from his notebook, wrote rapidly upon it and passed it to the old servant.

"Give it to the lady who will admit you at that address. Wait there for me until I come, no matter how long that time may be. Will you do it, James?"

"Yes, sir."

James, very much in the manner of one who is stupefied, found his hat and then returned to the room where Wyndham was awaiting him. The friend of his master was still standing in the middle of the floor and evidently had not moved after the instant when James left him.

"I am ready, sir," he said. "Can I—would it be possible—I mean are you willing that I should see—him—before I go?"

"No, James," was the calm reply. "Go as you are. Forget that you have seen him at all except as you saw him last in life. What comes after that—ah, well! Go as you are, James. Do not forget your overcoat. The night is cold."

James hesitated at the door. He stopped and looked back, but Wyndham was still in the same position in the middle of the floor. He did not raise his head or make a sign, and the old servant stepped sadly into the hall and closed the door.

Wyndham still remained in the attitude of one who is listening. He could, in fact, hear the old man's footfalls as he descended the stairs; he could hear the bang of the outer door when it closed, and not until then did he make a move. Even then he only raised his head, so that he could listen more intently and waited.

Many minutes passed in this manner, but at last, as if satisfied that there was no chance that James would return, he closed the inside shutters at the windows, after which he helped himself to a portion of the brandy on the center table.

After that, with distinct deliberation, he opened again the door which communicated with the room where Pendleton's body had been discovered.

He approached it and for a moment stood silently regarding the grewsome aspect. Twice he sighed deeply. Once he bent forward and intently examined the hilt of the weapon that had taken the life of his friend, but he did not is all right, if you are too fat; and all wrong, if too thin already.

Fat, enough for your habit, is healthy; a little more, or less, is no great harm. Too fat, consult a doctor; too thin, persistently thin, no matter what cause, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil.

There are many causes of getting too thin; they all come under these two heads: overwork and under-digestion.

Stop over-work, if you can; but, whether you can or not, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, to balance yourself with your work. You can't live on it—true—but, by it, you can. There's a limit, however; you'll pay for it

IN HONOR OF CAPT. WILL HAYDEN.

Last Tuesday evening, the members of Co. "C" tendered a banquet at the armory to former Capt. Wm. Hayden and it was one of the most pleasant occasions ever at the armory. The occasion of the compliment was on account of the illness of Capt. Hayden and the only drawback was the fact that he was too ill, on so bad a night, to be present.

The armory was nicely decorated, the spread the best and the attention of the boys even better than their best efforts. Under Gen. F. B. Wood as toast master, responses were made by Scove Walker, B. P. Anderson, A. D. Lawrence, Alvord, Doolittle, Bowen and Osborn.

The evening was quite an experience society, remarks by Anderson and Lawrence, taking the company back to the time of the old Zouaves in 1872. But as a fact since that time there has never been a man in Tecumseh who has taken the interest in the company as has Capt. Hayden and never a man so tenderly loved, and with the occasion of the little testimonial of this evening, it is only the tender wish of every man that he may be well and strong to meet and encourage them many years to come. The kind words and experiences of this evening gave the boys life and ambition for renewed work. Even the reception in Hayden's honor threw off some of Hayden's old life and ambition.

WEDDED.

Wednesday Evening in the Presence of a Hundred Friends

MISS ORA B. GILLESPIE AND JOHN E. MURPHY

Plighted their Troth. A Pretty Wedding.

Wednesday evening, at the country residence of Mr. and Mrs. Richard B. Gillespie, north of town, Ora B., the second daughter, and John E. Murphy were united in the bonds of holy wedlock.

Promptly at 7 o'clock the pianist, Mrs. J. Q. Look, began to play the wedding march and the bridal party filed in. First came the Rev. W. F. Jones, then the attending couple, the bride's sister, Miss Jennie, and the groom's brother, James. These were followed by the contracting parties. The party took their places under a wedding bell in the parlor and Rev. Jones pronounced the words uniting them forever.

After hearty congratulations from the 100 guests assembled, the dining room was filled and the bride and groom and attendants served a most delightful feast. The dining room was soon filled again with the young people and then the couple took their chance to slip out. The lady got away but the guests were too quick for Mr. Murphy and compelled him to keep them company for about two hours, then let him go with a hearty God-speed. Their destination is unknown.

The bride wore a beautiful white gown and carried a bunch of white carnations and the bride's maid also wore white but trimmed in pink and carrying pink carnations. The dining room was draped with pink, large pink ribbon loops and bows and smilax adorning the table with a boquet of carnations in the center. The gifts were numerous and costly, conspicuous among them being $50 in gold from the groom's father.

Among those present from away were Miss Grace Gillespie, of Newaygo; Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Clum, Mr. and Mrs. John Mendham, of Milford; Mrs. Eugene Bogart, of Alma; Miss May Farley, of Jackson; Jas. Murphy, of Toledo; Miss Minnie Perry, of Olivet; Miss Katherine Hopkins, of Lansing; James Langthorne, of Britton; Miss Myrtle Kemp, of Macon; A. D. Macham and family, of Holloway.

These young people have spent their whole lives near here, Miss Gillespie having been born in the house in which she was married. Hence they are widely known and liked by everyone as young people of sterling worth and industry. Miss Gillespie is a graduate of our high school, has a fine education in music and is a very bright girl. Mr. Murphy is certainly lucky in securing this prize to brighten his years.

Mr. and Mrs. Gillespie will soon move into the Garlinghouse house on Pearl street, which they have lately purchased, and Mr. and Mrs. Murphy will make their home on the farm.

Get Horses Clipped

While preparing to make a cellar under the job department of the Telegram building in Adrian the workmen were warned of danger by a portion of the wall caving in, nearly separating the annex from the main building. It was neccessary to move nearly all the things out of the job department and get as much weight off the floor as possible. The building will have to be torn down and rebuilt.

HAD A WORDY WAR.

Corliss and Richardson Clashed on Pacific Cable Question.

Washington, March 13.—Again yesterday the ship subsidy bill occupied practically the entire time of the senate. Mr. McCumber (N. D.) presented a carefully prepared argument in which, as a representative of an agricultural state, he favored the bill on the ground of its protective features.

Mr. Depew (N. Y.), one of the members of the committee on commerce, delivered an elaborate speech, in which he analyzed the arguments both for and against the proposition to pay subsidies to the shipping industry. Both as an argument and as an oratorical effort, the speech was brilliant and was listened to attentively by senators and by throngs in the galleries. His peroration, in which he pictured in glowing language the results of the operation of the bill, elicited hearty applause from the galleries.

A few bills were passed, including one providing for the redemption of Hawaiian silver coins and substitution therefor of American silver coins.

General debate on the postoffice appropriation bill continued in the house yesterday, a number of topics being discussed. The proceedings were enlivened by a clash between Mr. Corliss of Michigan and Mr. Richardson of Alabama on the subject of the Pacific cable. This is the second time these two members have locked horns on the cable question. Mr. Sims of Tennessee devoted some time to showing how the house had been "buncoed," he considered, in connection with the permanent census bill. Mr. Dougherty (Mo.) discussed rural free delivery, Mr. Jackson (Kan.) the government ownership of telegrams, and Mr. Greene (Pa.) the Philippine situation. He argued that if we would proclaim our purpose to grant independence to the Filipinos the insurrection would cease instantly. The house adjourned at 4:30 out of respect to the memory of Doorkeeper Glenn, who died yesterday.

Conscience Stamps.

The postoffice department has a "conscience fund" of its own. Not at all unusual is it for people to use a poorly canceled stamp and then to regret cheating the government out of 2 cents. In order to secure peace of mind the 2 cent culprit will send a good stamp to the department with an anonymous explanation. This stamp is turned over to an official of the files and mails division, who pastes it on a large card and draws a couple of pen marks across it. The effect would be just as good if the repentant canceled the stamp himself.

Sir Andrew Clark was accustomed to define old age as the period of life at which a man no longer adjusted himself to his environment.

Lockjaw from Cobwebs.

Cobwebs put on a cut lately gave a woman lockjaw, millions know that the best thing to put on a cut is Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the infallible healer of wounds, ulcers, sores, skin eruptions, burns, scalds and piles. It cures or no pay. Only 25c at C. A. Wright's drug store.

ARE YOU TROUBLED WITH INDIGESTION?

Indigestion or Dyspepsia is the cause of more ailments than any other disease. The stomach is unable to digest the food and it remains, clogging up the digestive organs, stopping circulation and disorganizing the nervous system. Stum-Ac-Oids will make things right. They cure dyspepsia by helping the stomach in the work of digestion. 50c. Tablets. For sale by,

Deafness Cannot be Cured

By local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Halls' Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Life Guards.

The Life Guards are two regiments of cavalry forming part of the British household troops. They are gallant soldiers, and every loyal British heart is proud of them. Not only the king's household, but yours, ours, everybody's should have it's life guards. The need of them is especially great when the greatest foes of life, diseases, find allies in the very elements, as colds, influenza, catarrh, the grip and pneumonia do in the stormy month of March. The best way that we know of to guard against these diseases is to strengthen the system with Hood's Sarsaparilla—the greatest of all life guards. It removes the conditions in which those diseases make their most successful attack, gives vigor and tone to all the vital organs and functions, and imparts a genial warmth to the blood. Remember the weaker the system the greater the exposure to disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the system strong.

Tecumseh people endorse this.

Mrs. J. W. Owen, wife of the well-known carpenter, living in the south-eastern section of Tecumseh, says: "I am very well pleased with Doan's Kidney Pills. I procured a box at C. A. Wright's drug store and they did me a lot of good. I had heart trouble and my kidneys did not perform their proper duties. This condition existed for some time. I tried different remedies which were recommended to me but received little if any benefit from them. I will cheerfully say this for Doan's Kidney Pills. I received more permanent relief from their use than from any other medicine I ever used. I am pleased to testify in their value."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S.. Remember the name Doan and take no substitute.

CHOSE NICARAGUA ROUTE.

Senate Committee on Canals Pass Their Opinion.

Washington, March 13.—The senate committee on isthmian canals has decided by a vote of 7 to 4 to report the Hepburn bill, providing for the construction of the isthmian canal via the Nicaragua route.

The action of the committee was taken at a called meeting held during the afternoon and came after a brief report by Senator Morgan, chairman of the committee, detailing the result of a conference with Secretary Hay as to the status of diplomatic negotiations with the Central American republics concerning the canal. He stated that the secretary had told him that there are no negotiations in progress between the United States and Colombia concerning the matter and that the new minister from Colombia had not even presented his credentials; but that on the other hand the representatives of this country and those of Nicaragua and Costa Rica had been in consultation and had agreed upon practically all points to be covered in concession treaties, nothing really being left in that connection but to put the agreement in writing. He said that the governments of these two countries had manifested a disposition to make all the concessions the United States could ask to aid in the construction of a canal, and that among these concessions is one for perpetual right of way.

Senator Morgan, after the adjournment of the committee, said that he probably would report the bill to the senate today. While he would use all due diligence in securing consideration of the measure he had had no conference with the republican leaders of the senate as to when the measure should be taken up for consideration.

Lost Both His Feet.

Battle Creek, Mich., March 13.—Vern E. Vidrig of Olivet had both feet taken off above the ankles last night while stealing a ride on a Grand Trunk freight car from Olivet to this city. The train broke in two three miles east of this city at the exact point where Widrig stood on the bumpers. The trainmen brought him to this city and he was taken to the Nichols hospital, where Dr. Palmer amputated his legs above the ankle. Eaton Thornton, Widrig's companion, received severe bruises about the hips and head. Both boys are sons of well-to-do farmers living near Olivet station. Widrig is 17 and Thornton 21.

The republicans of the county will be in the city Friday in large numbers to attend the banquet of the Lenawee County Lincoln and McKinley Republican club, and there will undoubtedly be a large number of them present at the conference.

Dangers of Pneumonia.

A cold at this time if neglected is liable to cause pneumonia which is so often fatal, and even when the patient has recovered the lungs are weakened, making them peculiarly susceptible to the development of consumption. THEY CRUSH THE POWERS

This is written in mid-October. The long, oppressive summer is quite gone. Fading leaf, withering tree and the rustling corn in the fields are signs of the season. Fog, frost, rain, snow,—they are coming. You remember last winter; of 1900 and 1901. The weather was cruel. Ah! the thousands it killed, and the hundreds of thousands it maimed and crippled. Oh, the rough grasp it laid on men at work, women at home, and children in cribs and cradles. Coughs that began before Thanksgiving Day are racking and tearing them still; yes, and growing worse as they dig deeper into the poor, tired throat and lungs. Many were cured by using Benson's Porous Plasters. For the soothing and healing power of these Plasters is wonderful. They conquer the complaints

No other plaster, no other medicine or application, can compare with them. Coughs, colds, backache, rheumatism, lumbago, kidney and liver troubles, asthma, influenza,—they all go down before Benson's Plasters like a snow image in the sun. You can't throw money away on a Benson's Plaster. Everybody is going to use them this season. But make certain you get the genuine. IS MINUS A WIFE

Wm. Eaton's Wife of Grand Rapids Elopes.

LETTER DISCLOSES INTENTIONS

Believed to Have Departed With E. H. Belden, a Barber—Eaton Thinks His Wife Caused His Illness—Believed to Be In Grand Rapids.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 17.—William Eaton, who is ill in Kalamazoo, and who is said to believe his wife is responsible, lived in this city last summer in the north end. He is considerably older than his wife and was jealous of attentions paid her by E. H. Belden, with whom, it is stated, she has now eloped.

When the Eatons went to Kalamazoo, Belden sold his shop and a short time later told his wife he was going on the road to organize fraternal insurance lodges. His wife learned later that he went to Kalamazoo. He returned, but has visited Kalamazoo several times since.

Three weeks ago Tuesday he left home, saying he was going to look up a location for a barber shop. She has not seen him since, but a week ago she received a letter from the chief of police in Kalamazoo, stating that Belden had left there in company with Mrs. Eaton and inclosing a letter, written previously by Mrs. Eaton to Belden and addressed to Grand Rapids. Among other things, including some loving passages, it contains the following:

"Oh, my dear Will, you must have that $20 saved by this time. I can't stand it here any longer. I'm not going to wait on the old grumbler any more, not even to give him his medicine. I quarrel with him all I can. Why don't you do the same with your wife, then perhaps you could break loose. I'll meet you when you say in Grand Rapids, and we'll go to Cadillac."

Mrs. Belden said that when her husband left home the last time he said he was going to Muskegon, and a gentleman she knew later told her he saw him get off at Muskegon. He must have gone to Kalamazoo later.

Suicide in Royal Oak.

Royal Oak, Mich., March 17.—Miss Maggie Rennie, 38 years of age and unmarried, committed suicide at the residence of her father, Alexander Rennie, Sunday afternoon by swallowing carbolic acid. Miss Rennie had gone upstairs to rest, and when called for dinner she failed to respond. Her sister went up to the room where she lay and found her in terrible agony. A three-ounce bottle bearing a carbolic acid label was before her, but the contents were gone. Dr. D. A. Hatt was summoned but all attempt to save the woman's life proved futile. Miss Rennie was highly respected, and no cause for the act is known.

Fined for Gossoping.

Port Huron, Mich., March 17.—Anthony Spade has been convicted of slander by a jury in the police court for circulating stories connecting the name of a respectable young lady as having been present in the Briggs house the night that place was raided by the police and half a dozen couples taken to the jail. Stories had been circulated by gossips connecting a number of innocent names with the disgraceful affair, and one of them was brought home to young Spade. He was fined $35 or in default to spend 65 days in the Detroit house of correction.

Jackson, Middleville, $10; Jerome B. Warner, Frankfort, $12; George Miller, Blissfield, $10; M. Norman Van Alstine, Big Rapids, $17; Gideon L. Mass, Harbor Springs, $17. Widows—Daniel N. Stocking, father, Yankee Springs, $12; Margaret Tenhohen, Grand Rapids, $8; Emma A. Earl, Gobleville, $12. War with Spain—Hassle P. Kipp, Hudson, $12.

New Michigan Postmasters.

Washington, March 17.—Michigan postmasters appointed Saturday: Grand Junction, Van Buren Co., Delace Siggins, vice Dewey Rogers, resigned; Stafford, Hillsdale Co., L. E. Stafford, vice C. F. Stafford, dead; Wetmore, Alger Co., W. F. Card, vice T. F. McCreedy, removed.

Attempted to Crack a Safe.

Lansing, Mich., March 17.—Safe blowers attempted to open the safe in the office of the Robert A. Pott Oil Co. the other night with nitro-glycerine. The safe was badly damaged, but the door was not forced open. The job was attempted by experienced safe-crackers.

MICHIGAN BRIEFS.

Mr. William Frankis of Centerville, aged 61, was found dead in his home Saturday. He was a widower and lived alone.

Stewart Johnston, a 10-year-old boy of Grand Haven, was caught in the gear of a Dutch windmill Saturday and had his leg and side terribly lacerated. He will live despite his injuries.

About a dozen new smallpox cases have developed in Alpena. The Lockwood and Baldwin primary schools have closed and all the pupils ordered to remain in their own homes.

The smokestack of the Sparta rolling mills collapsed Saturday, doing a considerable amount of damage. The electric lighting plant is located in this building and the town will be left in total darkness until a new chimney can be erected.

Worse Than That.

"I am told, sir, that you spoke of me as a common liar."

"Whoever told you that, sir, must have been trying to break it to you gently. I said you were a whole bureau of statistics."—Chicago Tribune.

DIDN'T DO ENOUGH

So the Yosemite Boys Go Unrewarded

NOT A MEDAL FOR THEM

Were Not Injured by Enemy's Fire and Only Forced a Transport to Run Ashore—Detroit Men Are Reticent.

Washington, March 15.—Some time ago the naval board on awards decided that the engagement in which the U. S. S. Yosemite took part in June, 1898, was not big enough, in its eyes, to warrant the bestowal of West Indian campaign medals upon the surviving members of the crew.

A large part of the Yosemite's complement during the war with Spain was made up of naval militiamen of Detroit, Mich., and an appeal was made from that quarter to the president against the board's decision. The matter was referred back to the board, and it has reported to Secretary Long that, after a careful consideration of facts, it still holds that, while the conduct of the crew is shown to have been most commendable, the actual importance of the affair was not such as to warrant commemorative medals. It is declared that the Yosemite was not injured by the enemy's fire, and that she inflicted no damage of any consequence to the Spaniards, except to force the transport Antonio Lopez to run ashore to escape capture.

Detroit, Mich., March 15.—The decision announced at Washington yesterday that the members of the Michigan State Naval brigade were not entitled to Spanish war medals did not seem to cause great surprise among the veterans in Detroit. Attorney Bingley R. Fales, who presented the case before the board of awards, has not returned from Washington.

Strathearn Hendrie, who accompanied Attorney Fales to Washington, said: "I rather expected a decision along the lines handed out, but I do not care to discuss the matter or say why I anticipated such a decision."

LONDON IN COURT.

Brilliant Scene in the Great Metropolis.

London, March 15.—The beautiful spring weather of the past few days changed yesterday afternoon to a heavy downpour, which continued throughout the evening and quite spoiled, as far as the general public was concerned, the spectacle of the king's court. In spite of the blinding rain, which turned the roads to quagmires and hid the entrance of the palace in blue mist, the constant stream of arriving carriages was watched by a large crowd, which cheered most loyally when their majesties, in a stage coach, escorted by officers of the Life Guards, came along the Mall and passed into the palace. Their majesties were bowing all along the route, but, in common with the occupants of other carriages, they could scarcely be recognized through the rain.

Once inside the palace, the contrast was most striking. Nothing so brilliant has been seen since the early days of the reign of Queen Victoria. The blaze of new electric lights, the scent of flowers heaped along the corridors, the glitter of ladies' jewels and dresses, and the court uniforms made a memorable and magnificent scene. King Edward's private band played in a gallery of the ball room where the court was held. Their majesties stood simply and without a dais at one end of the room and a few paces in front of the royal circle, which included the prince and princess of Wales, while further back were ranged other royal personages.

On one side of their majesties stood a brilliant group of ambassadors and diplomats and ladies, displaying gorgeous dresses and jewels; on the other side stood the members of the social household. King Edward received the guests according to precedence and afterwards moved freely among the brilliant company. An informal supper was served after the reception and the court continued until midnight.

Funston Wants to Stay.

Washington, March 15.—Brig.-Gen. Funston, who is making a visit to the east, arrived in Washington last night accompanied by Lieut. B. J. Mitchell, his aide. The general's purpose here mainly is to pay his respects to President Roosevelt and Secretary Root. He will remain until next week, when he expects to depart for Oakland, Cal., where Mrs. Funston is staying. He said that his leave of absence from the division of the Philippines expires on the 10th of April, at which time he will leave San Francisco unless there is a change in the assignment. If Gen. Funston is to be given duty in the United States on the expiration of his leave, he has not yet been made aware of it. His preference would be to remain somewhere in the northern part of this country for about a year in order that his health, which was so severely shattered during the campaign in the Philippines, may be fully restored.

Big Steamship Syndicate.

New York, March 15.—It is learned from what is considered an authoritative source that arrangements have been tentatively made—if indeed the matter has not already taken definite and final shape—whereby the White Star line will pass under the management and control of the Morgan steamship syndicate. With the acquisition of this line the syndicate is now credited with controlling the following companies: The American line to Southampton; the Red Star line to Antwerp; the Leyland line to Liverpool; the Atlantic Transport to London; the Dominion line to Liverpool and London and the Mediterranean from Boston.

A Rock That Sells Liquor.

Inez, Ky., March 17.—In this county there is a mysterious rock whose owner cannot be found. The circuit court ordered a warrant to be issued for the person upon whose land the rock was situated and summoned numerous citizens, but signally failed to find an owner for the land. The rock is known as the "Big Nigger," because of its color. Persons wishing liquor go to the rock and ask in a loud voice if the "Nigger" has any liquor. They then retire for a little while, after leaving money on the rock. They return and find the liquor, but the money is gone. This rock has been making the night hideous with demoniacal yells for ten months, and yet it is impossible to find anyone who has sold liquor in that region.

Child in Muskegon Dead After Drinking Carbolic Acid—Woman Near Hillsdale Loses Her Life in Horrible Manner.

Lyons, Mich., March 15.—The 8-year-old son of William McSherry died yesterday afternoon after a half hour of terrible convulsions, the result of drinking part of the unknown contents of a bottle picked up by the wayside on his way from school. A companion of the same age, the son of James Lawless, drank from the same bottle, and doctors express no hope of his recovery.

Muskegon, Mich., March 15.—The 2-year-old daughter of Mrs. Mabel Purdy playfully swallowed some of the contents of a bottle of carbolic acid yesterday morning and died last night at 7:30 o'clock. The poison stood on a shelf and the child climbed on a chair and obtained it without the mother's observing her. After swallowing it, the child lisped, "Mamma, this tastes nice," and then became unconscious, in which state she lingered until death.

Hillsdale, Mich., March 15.—Mrs. Westgate, an old lady living with her son, Alonzo Westgate, five miles southwest of Hillsdale, died from burns yesterday afternoon. She was alone in the house for a few minutes and in some way her clothes caught fire. Before assistance came she was so badly burned that she died in a few hours.

Fiendish Brutality.

Deerfield, Mich., March 15.—Samuel Thompson, a middle-aged man living near Deerfield, on the Ingoldy farm, has been arrested on a charge of abusing his family many times, his offenses consisting of knocking his wife around at his will. The wife makes complaint that last Friday he got angry at their daughter, aged 12, and beat her unmercifully. She declares that he grabbed the child by the hair and churned her up and down on the floor, throwing her about until she was unconscious. In the operation he is alleged to have pulled great handfuls of hair out of the child's head. The whole neighborhood is aroused.

The money will be promptly raised. This settles the question of rebuilding the sanitarium.

MICHIGAN BRIEFS.

The striking trammers at the Champion mine at Champion are inclined to create trouble. Many of them have begun to drink heavily and indirectly threatened officials of the company.

Margaret J. Wallace of Ox Bow Bend, drove into Sparta bareheaded and said two highwaymen had robbed her of $25 north of Kent City, and had choked and pounded her. There is a big wound in her cheek. The woman is about 60 years of age.

Privates Van Houten and Wagner, two military convicts, tried to escape from Fort Wayne the other night by starting to cut away the woodwork around the bars of their wash room. Other prisoners in the room gave them away. They have been sentenced to two weeks' solitary confinement.

A queer discovery was made in the rubbish at the Battle Creek sanitarium. Under the iron warped by the intense heat and mass of stuff that had been melted was taken out 2,000 quarts of canned fruit that had not been affected by the fire and was in good condition and all right for table use.

HORTON IS WILLING.

Lenawee Will Ably Support Him for Governor.

Adrian, Mich., March 15.—Friends of George B. Horton to the number of 80, representing all parts of the county, met at his conference at Workingmen's hall at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Horton defined his position briefly. It is that "Barkis is willin'," providing he can get a sufficiently good ante-convention sendoff, particularly among the home republicans.

A committee appointed by the conference drafted the sense of the meeting into a preamble and resolutions asking him to run. The went through with a rush.

Mr. Horton will consider the situation and will give his decision in a few days. The only possible stumbling block to a solid Lenawee county delegation for Horton seems to be a newspaper statement which he gave out when Bryan ran first. It is said that the card strongly leaned toward free silver. That sticks in many of the old liners' crops.

Purchased Boats and Dock.

St. Joseph, Mich., March 15.—The Dunkley Transportation Co., operating a line of steamers between South Haven and Chicago, has purchased the docks and three steamers of the H. W. Williams Transportation Co. of South Haven. The boats purchased were the steamers City of Kalamazoo, Glen and H. W. Williams. The purchase price is estimated at $125,000. The Dunkley company is backed by the Michigan Central railroad in the new purchase.

Kalamazoo, Mich., March 15.—After a silence of 52 years, Lewis J. Grant of this city believes he has located his long-lost brother. The brother, Alexander Grant, dropped out of sight in 1850, when he left the family home at Glengary, Canada, for the California gold fields. The brother in this city ran across an advertisement signed by Alexander in a Canadian paper and has started communications with him, which are expected to result in a long-postponed reunion.

Life Guards.

The Life Guards are two regiments of cavalry forming part of the British household troops. They are gallant soldiers, and every loyal British heart is proud of them. Not only the king's household, but yours, ours, everybody's should have it's life guards. The need of them is especially great when the greatest foes of life, diseases, find allies in the very elements, as colds, influenza, catarrh, the grip and pneumonia do in the stormy month of March. The best way that we know of to guard against these diseases is to strengthen the system with Hood's Sarsaparilla—the greatest of all life guards. It removes the conditions in which those diseases make their most successful attack, gives vigor and tone to all the vital organs and functions, and imparts a genial warmth to the blood. Remember the weaker the system the greater the exposure to disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the system strong.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

By local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Halls' Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

touch the body or the chair in which it rested. Once he looked toward the door—he had left ajar—but not with the startled glance of one who expects to discover somebody peering in upon the scene; it was more as if he were measuring the distance and relieving by calculation some mathematical doubt that still possessed him.

There was a safe in one corner of the room, one of those little iron safes that lock with a key. The key was in the lock, and from it dangled others attached by a ring—a ring that he had often seen in the possession of his friend.

He threw the door of the safe open without hesitation, and with an air of familiarity that is indescribable selected certain bundles of documents which he deposited on the floor beside him. Then he removed the key from the lock, selected another from the ring that was suspended to it and with that one opened an inner drawer of the safe. From that, also, he removed the papers, but those he placed in his pocket. Then he relocked the drawer, replaced the larger key in the safe lock, closed the door again, arranging it as nearly as possible as he had found it and deposited the papers he had abstracted from the safe in various pockets about his clothing.

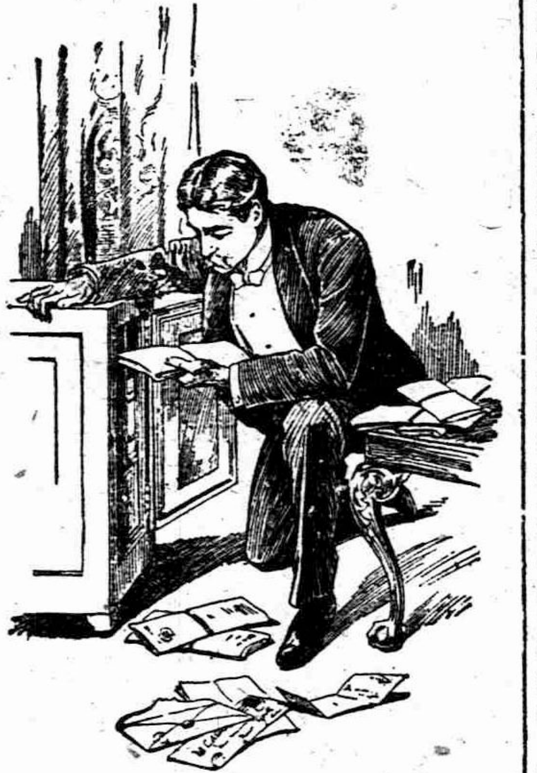
Then he sighed while he looked again intently upon the body in the corner.

For a moment after that he remained apparently in deep thought, with bowed head and tight lips, and then he went out of the room and sought the one habitually occupied by James.

There he selected a handkerchief, which bore the name of the old valet, and returned with it to the room of the tragedy.

Ten minutes later he quietly left the house, and as quickly as he could traverse the distance he re-entered the club where he had parted with Pendleton less than five hours before. He went at once to the desk.

"Has Mr. Pendleton returned?" he asked, and on being informed that he had not he added: "You may destroy the message I left for him. I expected that he would be here a half hour ago. When he comes in, say that I am in the cafe." And as he turned to go to the cafe the outer door opened, and the very man with whom Pendleton had left the club entered.



From that, also, he removed the papers.

But Wyndham did not turn his head. He went calmly on his way to the cafe.

CHAPTER V.

THE GENTLEMAN FROM MEXICO.

CRAIG WYNDHAM had been only a few moments in the cafe of the club when a card was given to him by one of the servants. Upon it was engraved, "Carlos de Escudera y Romero, 4 Incarnaccion, Ciudad de Mejico."

"Ask the gentleman if he will not join me here," he said to the servant, and presently, approaching him, he discovered the same personage whom he had twice seen that evening and whom he verily believed to be the assassin of Burr Pendleton.

With a look of unrecognition in his eyes Wyndham rose from his chair to receive the stranger, extending his right hand as cordially as if he did not believe the one it grasped to be guilty of the foulest deed he had ever known.

"Mr. Craig Wyndham?" said the stranger interrogatively. "The friend of Mr. Burr Pendleton?"

"Yes," replied Wyndham, noticing that Escudera used perfect English. "Your name is not known to me, however. Will you be seated, sir?"

"Thank you. I also claim friendship with Mr. Pendleton. I made his acquaintance in Mexico, where we had many pleasant hours together. I met him here early this evening—before the dinner hour, in fact—and expected to see him again about this time. I have heard him speak of you so often that when the clerk at the desk told me your name—I entered the club immediately after you—I took the liberty of sending my card to you."

"I am very glad that you did so. Mr. Pendleton and I had only just met when he was called away, doubtless by you. I also expected him here about this time. We will wait for him together. In the meantime be my guest, Mr.—pardon me, but I am unused to Spanish names. May I ask how you pronounce your name?"

"I use the first one of the two, Escudera. Yes, I did leave the club with Pendleton. In fact, I went to his house with him, but I remained only a moment. I discovered that he was very tired and so agreed to meet him here later, where he did me the honor to say that he would present me to you."

Wyndham's eyes sparkled for one brief instant, for he knew that statement to be a lie. He knew that Pendleton did not intend to return to the club that night and that he had not promised such an introduction to the Mexican for the very reason that he expected to spend the evening in his rooms with Wyndham. It was the first tally in the score that he intended to make against the Mexican.

Refreshments and cigars were ordered and two hours passed while the men conversed upon every subject that either could think to introduce, and at last it was the stranger who suggested that the hour was so late that there was small chance that Pendleton would appear at the club that night.

It was Wyndham's suggestion that they should go out together, and they strolled along the avenue side by side as far as the hotel where the Mexican was stopping. After that Wyndham returned to the club and, finding a number of congenial friends engaged at one of the card tables, played with them until daylight.

It was rarely that he did such a thing, but that night he had especial reasons for it, and never had he appeared to better advantage or played the game with more scrupulous care.

Always during the game it seemed to him that he could see his friend as he saw him in the sleeping room of his apartment sitting dead in the chair in the corner, and at such moments deathly faintness stole over him, which required all his strength of will to conquer.

He knew that he was incurring a deadly risk in acting as he had done, for if it should appear that he had been to Pendleton's rooms suspicion, which might in any case attach to him, would in the minds of many take the form of certainty.

Still for the plan that he had formed during the few moments when he stood by the window while James wept near him he was pursuing the only logical course. He felt that he must take the chances.

What nervous force he was compelled to exert in order not to manifest the perturbation he felt during those hours of the night nobody but himself could ever know, and when he left the club in the full light of the early morning in the company of one of his companions in the game it brought the first moment of relief he had had from the terrible strain.

At his own door he left his friend and, saying that he would get two or three hours' sleep, entered the house where he lived. He knew that he was in a position to prove an alibi for every hour that had passed since he parted with Pendleton except those that were really the most vital—between 5 and 10 o'clock the preceding evening—and for those he must trust to nerve and chance in case the question should arise.

As soon as he was in his own room he carefully examined the papers that he had taken from the safe and in the interest he felt in them for the time partially forgot the awful reason for the examination.

From them he selected several which he concealed. The others he destroyed. But after he had bathed and refreshed himself, thus destroying all outward appearance of the effect of the events of the past night upon him, he returned to the club for his breakfast.

He had found among the papers the key to many things that he did not understand, and he felt certain that as soon as he could have a protracted talk with old James he would be enabled to see his way clearly before him. The mystery by which Pendleton was surrounded was beginning to unfold.

At the club he met Carleton Biggs, a character whose prototype may be found in almost every club of prominence in New York. They belong to the "has beens" in that they are among the oldest members, are always serving on some committee and have from some mysterious source income sufficient to pay their dues and purchase an occasional meal. But they are always ready to accept an invitation to breakfast or dine and regard their abilities to entertain as sufficient equivalent for the favor. More than that, they are ever ready to perform any slight gentlemanly service which will place one of their benefactors under obligations to repeat the invitation at the first opportune moment. Wyndham desired Biggs to perform just such a service for him, and for that reason invited him to take breakfast.

"By Jove!" he said. "It is too bad that Pendleton has not come in. Did you see him last night, Carleton?"

"No. I heard that he was back, but I did not see him."

"He was to meet me here during the evening and did not come. Then I supposed he would blow in for his breakfast. I really ought to get word to him before I go down town, and yet I haven't the time. I'll have to write a line and send it down by a messenger boy."

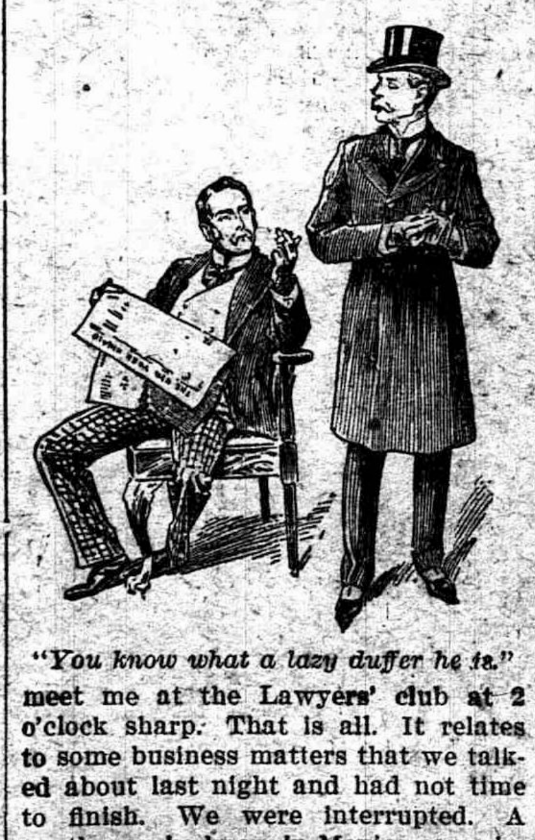
Biggs fidgeted an instant in his chair and then took the bait.

"I'm going down that way presently," he said. "I had it in mind to drop in and see Burr anyway, so if I can carry a message for you, old man"—

"Would you? That is just the thing. It will be a great favor, Carleton, if you will take the trouble."

"No trouble at all. I intended to stop there anyhow, you know. Will you write the message, or shall"—

"Certainly not. Just tell him that it is very important that he should meet me at the Lawyers' club at 2 o'clock sharp. That is all. It relates to some business matters that we talked about last night and had not time to finish. We were interrupted. A gentleman he knew in Mexico came in, and Burr left the club with him. I have not seen him since. Don't forget—at 2 sharp."



"You know what a lazy duffer he is."

"All right, Wyndham."

"And I say, Carleton, make him come. You know what a lazy duffer he is. Come along with him if you will and lunch with us at the Savarin. I'll be at the Lawyers' at 2 precisely, but I'll be in a hundred places between now and then, so there'll be no chance to get word to me. You'll be there, eh?"

"If you have business matters to discuss, perhaps"—

"Bosh! There is nothing that you cannot hear—all the world, for that matter. I'll expect you. You'll see Burr soon, won't you?"

"Within half an hour."

Wyndham went down town then and during the remainder of the forenoon attended to his affairs as stoically and as systematically as he always did. Not once did he deviate from his usual habits. He went to the same places, saw the same people, cracked jokes, laughed and in every way was just the same as he always was to those who knew him intimately.

Fortune favored him in one respect. Shortly after noon he met on the street, near the corner of John, Senor Escudera.

They shook hands cordially, and Wyndham invited the Mexican to see the pictures at Stewart's. There he introduced him to a number of acquaintances, and, selecting two of them, he asked them, in company with the Mexican, to go with him to the Lawyers' club, where he expected to meet two friends.

"We'll all have lunch together," he said by way of clinching the invitation.

Thus it happened that just as both hands of old Trinity clock pointed at 2 the four gentlemen entered the Equitable building together.

They had hardly crossed the threshold of the entrance before Carleton Biggs rushed forward and confronted Wyndham.

"I thought you'd never come," he said, "although, as a matter of fact, you are on time. I have been here nearly an hour."

"That was foolish of you, Carleton," drawled Wyndham. "I told you that I would be here at 2 sharp. Where is Burr?"

"I could not find him."

"Couldn't find him, eh? Well, it doesn't much matter. Fortunately, I did not need him."

Then he introduced Biggs all around and added:

"Come into the Savarin. We'll have luncheon anyhow."

When they were seated at the table and the order had been given, he turned to Biggs again and asked:

"Did James tell you where he had gone?"

"I couldn't find James either."

"That's strange."

"I went back three times and rang repeatedly each time, but nobody answered. Perhaps he did not go to his own rooms last night."

During this conversation Wyndham had glanced in the direction of Escudera several times, but if the Mexican heard what was said he gave no indication of it.

"Oh, yes, he did," replied Wyndham in response to the last remark. "Senor Escudera went there with him from the club. Did I not so understand you, senor?" he continued politely, turning to the gentleman from Mexico.

"What did you ask, Mr. Wyndham?" said Escudera calmly.

Craig Wyndham smiled, but he found it difficult to conceal the gleam of satisfaction that came into his eyes, for he felt that the Mexican had slightly overdone his part in that counter move. When the question was repeated, Escudera replied:

"Why, yes. I went with Mr. Pendleton from the club to his place of residence. I believe it was his intention to remain there last night, although I do not know. Perhaps he has been called away again."

The subject was changed after that, and when luncheon was finished the party separated. But Craig Wyndham thrust his arm under Biggs' and drew him along with him.

"Come with me," he said. "I have one or two things more to attend to, and after that we will go up town together. If we do not find Burr at the club, then we will go around and look him up. I shouldn't wonder if he was sleeping and had given James orders to admit nobody. He has done that thing before, you know."

A Common Dilemma.

"How do you like your new cook?"

"Ever so much, but I'm afraid to let her know it."

"Why?"

"She'd want more wages."

"Then why don't you appear dissatisfied?"

"Because then she'd leave."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Repairing Neatly Done

Never thought of such a sign for a medicine did you? Well, it's a good sign for Scott's Emulsion. The body has to be repaired like other things and Scott's Emulsion is the medicine that does it.

These poor bodies wear out from worry, from over-work, from disease. They get thin and weak. Some of the new ones are not well made—and all of the old ones are racked from long usage.

Scott's Emulsion fixes all kinds. It does the work both inside and out. It makes soft bones hard, thin blood red, weak lungs strong, hollow places full. Only the best materials are used in the patching and the patches don't show through the new glow of health.

No one has to wait his turn. You can do it yourself—you and the bottle.

March 12th, 1902, being the 65th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Zeluff, their children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren gave them a surprise at their home on Ottawa street.

Mr. Zeluff was born in Morristown, Morris county, N. J., August 26, 1814, and came to Michigan in '34. Mrs. Louisa Russell Zeluff was born in Town of Sodus, Ontario county, N. Y., April 2, 1818, and came to Michigan in '31, on the same boat from Buffalo to Monroe with the Camburn triplets. They were married March 12, 1837, at Petersburg, Mich., and have always lived in Michigan with the exception of one year in Ohio.

To them nine children were born, three of whom are living, J. H. Zeluff and Mrs. Emma Pocklington, of Britton, and Miss Viola Zeluff, of Tecumseh, Mich., with whom they reside. They have 13 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren who were all present but one.

Mrs. Zeluff fell in '77 and dislocated her hip, and in July, '97, suffered a stroke of paralysis, yet she is able to be up for meals and enjoys seeing her friends and having a hearty laugh with them. Mrs. Zeluff though in poor health, has stood the winter better than for several years past and enjoys talking over pioneer life.

ROUND ABOUT US.

Leighton Bush rode his bike on a Clinton sidewalk. This was contrary to the ordained rules of that village. He paid $3.50 for the transgression and the next time he rode, he rode in the road. Had the streets been like those in this city he could have rowed, as he rode in the road.—Adrian Press.

Adam Ickler, of Riga, has undergone a new experience. Adam was never sick a day in his life until last week; then one day his head swam, his ears rang and a general all gone feeling came over him, but when his cheeks began to swell, Adam thought that the world was coming to an end and that he had got to blow the trumpet; he sent for Dr. Eccles just for consolation: and was disappointed to find he had just a fair case of mumps.—Blissfield Advance.

A case of smallpox at the depot threatens serious trouble. A lady on the rear coach of the Monroe train came from Detroit and was on her way to Bronson. She alighted and entered the depot and was taken ill. Physicians were sent for and Drs. Johnson and Will Jewett pronounced it smallpox. She was at once removed to the car and the car sidetracked in the yard. Conductor Ketcham and the brakeman were not allowed to go out on the afternoon train. The waiting room was at once thoroughly fumigated, and every precaution taken to prevent any spread of the disease. Mr. Ketcham says not over half a dozen persons were in the car. But the fact remains that the exposures are numerous and no one can guess where the matter will terminate.—Adrian Press.

The older a woman grows the safer it is to intrust a secret to her keeping.

IT'S IMPOSSIBLE

To Disprove Facts. It is Decidedly Easy to verify Tecumseh Opinion.

Nothing by the way of an introduction could be added to their experiences and opinions given below, which could increase their value. Tecumseh people can safely be left to draw their own conclusions based on such convincing proof as this citizen offers. What is there lacking in evidence like this, to satisfy a dyed-in-the-wool doubting Thomas?

Mr. Henry Keyser, retired farmer and capitalist, place of residence in the southwestern section of Tecumseh says: "I am thoroughly convinced of the superior merits of this poplar remedy, Doan's Kidney Pills. They deserve naught save the highest praise. Before going to C. A. Wright's drug store for a box I had a dull aching pain in my back which annoyed me for some time and the secretions from the kidneys were irregular and unnatural. To say that I was surprised at the effect is putting it very mildly. In a very short time the trouble disappeared. I never knew a medicine that worked so quickly and satisfactorly."

For sale by all dealers: Price 50 cents per box. Foster-Milburn company, Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States. Remember the name Doan's and take no substitute.

BEYOND A DOUBT.

Good Hard Facts Told in a Few Words as Possible.

Mrs. Edgar Packard, of Tecumseh, Mich., says: "Until I tried Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Pills sold at Chas. A. Wright's drug store, I suffered a great deal from nervousness, sleeplessness, headaches and indigestion. Since using the pills I can say my nervous system has been toned up, I sleep well, the headaches are gone and my digestion is greatly improved. I think the pills a fine nerve medicine."

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Pills are sold at 50c a box at dealers or Dr. A. W. Chase Medicine Co., Buffalo, N. Y. See that portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M. D., are on every package.

There is nothing like good, common sense in the affairs of life.

Itchiness of the skin, horrible plague. Most everybody afflicted in one way or another. Only one safe, never failing cure—Doan's Ointment. At any drug store, 50 cents.

Lockjaw from Cobwebs.

Cobwebs put on a cut lately gave a woman lockjaw, millions know that the best thing to put on a cut is Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the infallible healer of wounds, ulcers, sores, skin eruptions, burns, scalds and piles. It cures or no pay. Only 25c at C. A. Wright's drug tore.

Better have ague than to argue.

If you wish beautiful clear white cloths, use Red Cross Ball Blue. Large 2 oz. package, all grocers, 5 cts.

MEMORY DOES NOT FAIL.

It Simply Gets Weak and Languid For Want of Use.

Memory does not "fail" (except in loss of all the faculties); it simply gets weak and languid for want to use, just as the physical organs do. People often say, "My memory is failing," when it is really as good as ever if they would give it a chance.

A word, a date, a name, an incident, comes up, or rather fails to come up when you want it. There seems to be no possible way of remembering it. You make two or three efforts, give up and say, "There's no use; it's gone from me."

Nonsense! It hasn't. It is there just as much as it ever was, only there are a lot of things over it. Keep at work, bring your will to bear upon it, try and try and try, and after awhile you can get it.

And, better, you will find that the exercise required in remembering it will help you next time, and that a little toil and determination put together will accomplish wonders in the whole range of the faculties.

Look over your memory, see where you are most deficient and exercise it in that respect. You can do it at any odd time; while you are walking, riding, resting after a day's work, listening perforce to a dull speaker. Don't let a few failures discourage you. The long corridor of recollection lined upon both sides with valuable material will be opened for you because of your importunity if you use it.—Everywhere.

A Little Too Sure.

A well known Philadelphian is noted for his inability to remember faces. He has passed by his best friends on the street as though he never before had seen them. A woman of his acquaintance is equally famous for never forgetting a face. She prides herself on this "gift," and she declares that the faces of every man, woman and child whom she has ever met is photographed on her memory. The absentminded man had passed her by several times, looking blankly at her. At last she said:

"I wager a box of the best cigars you ever smoked that I will recall myself to your recollection the next time I meet you."

The man in return wagered a box of gloves. One day the woman, going along Walnut street, felt sure she saw the man. He was abreast of her and showed no sign of recognition. The woman had an umbrella with her. She gave a sudden poke with it and hit the man's ribs. Startled, her victim looked up.

"Madam," he began in confusion.

"I beg your pardon," blushed the woman. "I—I struck the wrong man."

She had never seen him before in her life.—Philadelphia Times.

The Turquoise.

The turquoise, although not credited with either remedial or protective properties, so far as disease was concerned, was nevertheless regarded as a kind of sympathetic indicator, the intensity of its color being supposed to fluctuate with the health of the wearer.

The latter, however, by virtue of the stone he carried, could, it was said, fall from any height with impunity. The Marquis of Vilena's fool, however, was somewhat nearer the truth when he reversed the popular superstition in his assertion that the wearer of a turquoise might fall from the top of a high tower and be dashed to pieces without breaking the stone.

A Printer Greatly Surprised

"I never was so much surprised in my life, as I was with the results of using Chamberlain's Pain Balm," says Henry T. Crook, pressman of the Asheville, N. C. Gazette. "I contracted a severe case of rheumatism early last winter by getting my feet wet. I tried several things for it without benefit. One day while looking over the Gazette, I noticed that Pain Balm was positively guaranteed to cure rheumatism, so bought a bottle of it and before using two thirds of it my rheumatism had taken its flight and I have not had a rheumatic pain since." FOOLED THE OLD MAN.

St. Louis Couple Eloped, Leaving a Misleading Note.

St. Joseph, Mich., March 17.—Sunday morning an excited man, Harrison A. Martin of St. Louis, Mo., retired manufacturer, arrived in St. Joseph looking for his daughter, Miss Katherine Martin, a society belle of that place, who left her home Friday in company with George A. Hay, with the avowed intention of being married here. The following note explains the mission of the angered father to this city:

"Dear Father: George and I will leave the city tonight. When you next learn of us we will be married at St. Joseph, Mich. KATHERINE."

The marriage records were scanned, but the two names sought were not found. Martin's only objection to the marriage is that the young man is not able to support his daughter in the style that she is accustomed to.

Martin is satisfied that the couple purposely left a note misinforming him of their intentions as to where they were going, and he will return to his home.

Eminent Actor to Talk.

Detroit, Mich., March 17.—Stuart Robson, the eminent comedian who Saturday evening closed his engagement at the Detroit opera house in "The Henrietta," has accepted the invitation extended him by the faculty and pupils of the Bay City high school to address them this afternoon in Bay City on "Oliver Goldsmith." Mr. Robson probably is more familiar with the life and work of "Poor Noll" than any other living American. Not only did he produce Augustus Thomas's play, "Oliver Goldsmith," three years ago with great artistic success, but he spent three months in Ireland and England in search of Goldsmithian data.

Hotel Higbee Changes Hands.

St. Joseph, Mich., March 17.—A big deal in hotel property occurred Sunday, and the papers will be executed today. The Hotel Higbee at Benton Harbor was purchased by B. F. Fowler of this city and A. J. Russell, a well-known hotel owner of Saugatuck, Mich. The hotel will be enlarged and 90 rooms are to be added. In the center of the building a well will be driven to tap a flow of mineral water 1,600 feet below the surface. A large mineral bath auditorium will be operated jointly with the hotel. The repairs and additional work will represent an expenditure of $50,000.

A Coal and Cement Company.

Bay City, Mich., March 17.—The Hecker Cement & Coal Co., which proposes to mine its own fuel, and also to use some of the shale found in connection with the coal in the manufacture of cement, will let a contract this week for sinking two coal shafts within a short distance of West Bay City and for equipping the mines with the most modern electrical machinery. The shafts are to be completed so that coal mining can be commenced by the time the cement plant is ready for operation, which will be early next fall.

New Rural Routes.

Washington, March 17.—Three additional free delivery routes will be established at Flint, to commence May 1, with George W. Kennedy, Emmer E. Fleming and Lewis T. Wells as carriers. The three routes will be 69½ miles long, cover an area of 77 square miles and serve a population of 2,079. The postoffice at Lewis and the special service between Lewis and Flint will be discontinued. Mail to Flint. Albert Tomblow has been appointed a substitute clerk in the postoffice at Lansing.

TO ACCOMMODATE those who are partial to the use of atomizers in applying liquids into the nasal passages for catarrhal troubles, the proprietors prepare Ely's Liquid Cream Balm. Price including the spraying tube is 75 cents. Druggists or by mail. The liquid embodies the medicinal properties of the solid preparation. Cream Balm is quickly absorbed by the membrane and does not dry up the secretions but changes them to a natural and healthy character. Ely Brothers, 56 Warren street, N. Y.

DIDN'T WANT A HAIRCUT.

But Barber's Shears Scared Cherokees Into Submission.

Muskogee, I. T., March 17.—Rather than submit to a haircut, eight fullblood Cherokee Indians, arrested Saturday charged with being in contempt of federal court, yesterday enrolled for the Dawes commission. These Indians are members of the Ketoowah society, composed of an element in the Cherokee Nation opposed to enrollment.

Last month Judge Raymond of the United States territorial court ordered them to present themselves for enrollment under pain of contempt. They disobeyed the order and were arrested and placed in the federal jail here. Saturday night the government officials pleaded with them to submit, but they declined stoutly, Redbird Smith, their leader, making an impassioned speech in defense of their action. Argument being of no avail, an order was issued that each prisoner should have his hair cut. They were lined up to take their turn in the barber's chair. When the first Indian had lost his shock of hair, the others broke down and signified their willingness to enroll. With sullen faces, they signed their names to the enrollment and were released.

Ardmore, I. T., March 17.—Secretary of the Interior Hitchcock, in a ruling just received, says Indians in the Creek nation may rent their allotments for a period of not longer than one year prior to the receipt of their deeds. Hundreds who have gone to the Creek nation with the idea that the lands are now open to purchase are disappointed. The Creek rolls are incomplete, the deeds are held up and thousands have already filed on their homesteads.

PRINCE TO RESIGN.

After Two Years' Service He drops Role of Admiral.

Berlin, March 17.—Admiral Prince Henry of Prussia, after completing the fleet maneuvers during the coming summer, will resign the command of the first squadron, which he has held for two years.

Prince Henry has held all positions in the German navy up to that of admiral. The only position higher command is that of the double squadron maneuvers, which have hitherto been conducted under a general inspector of the navy. It is expected that Prince Henry will be in command of the double squadron maneuvers next year.

Emperor William has ordered the battleships Wuertemberg and Baden to appear before Cuxhaven tomorrow to welcome Prince Henry upon his return to Germany on board the Hamburg-American steamer Deutschland. While the official program of Prince Henry's reception has not yet been published, the newspapers say that Emperor William will receive his brother on shore at Cuxhaven.

His Second Leg Pension.

The British admiral Sir James Gordon was a humorist in his way, and it is related of him and Admiral Pell that they used to amuse themselves in leisure hours by running foot races, being quite evenly matched, Sir James having a cork leg and Pell one of wood.

As an instance of his fondness for practical joking a story is now told: Sir James during a battle toward the end of his fighting career had his wooden leg shot away. The old sea fighter at once applied for a second "leg pension" and cheerfully drew it to the end of his days.

Dangers of Pneumonia.

A cold at this time if neglected is liable to cause pneumonia which is so often fatal, and even when the patient has recovered the lungs are weakened, making them peculiarly susceptible to the development of consumption. Foley's Honey and Tar will stop the cough, heal and strengthen the lungs and prevent pneumonia. John J. Orr.

I was all run down, tried different physicians and took all the nauseating preparations I ever heard of—Emulsions of Cod-Liver Oil included—but all to no avail; they only made me worse, finally I heard of the great curative powers of Vinol and concluded to try a bottle of it. Question Answered.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Get Green's Prize Almanac at J. J. Orr's.

THAT AWFUL MARCH

Waller Sends Details of the Samar Expedition.

LOST THEIR WAY MANY TIMES

Men Trudged Through Swollen Rivers and Over Barren Hills for Most of Twenty-Nine Days, Barefoot and on Short Rations.

Washington, March 20.—The navy department has made public another report from Major Waller, recounting in detail the stirring events of his tragic effort to cross the island of Samar. Major Waller begins with a statement that Lieut. Williams, Seventh infantry, who had just returned from a 12 days' trip in a fruitless search for a trail, and Capt. Pickering urged him not to make the attempt to cross Samar on account of the difficulties. But he decided to make the attempt, in view of the commanding general's evident desire to find the trail and run a wire across, starting with 50 men on Dec. 26, from Lanang.

The rivers were much swollen, and it took a long time to get the boat through the rapids. Trails were picked up only to be lost again, and the rain came down in torrents. The river the men were following curves almost to a circle and the banks held no trails. No signs of human habitation had been seen except a lonely fishing shack. There were not even birds. It took the whole of the 31st to reach the mountain pass. All the elements seemed to be against the men. Descending, the trail was again lost. The men were suffering from sores, from cuts made by thorns and from festering bites of leeches. They could get no fire and ate raw bacon. A raft was built, but sank with one man on it. Starting down the river, word came to Waller that many men could not keep up, so he decided to forge ahead for relief with 13 of the strongest men, leaving Capt. Porter in command of the main body. Another effort to build a floating raft failed. Waller finally came upon a clearing, where he found a shack and some growing vegetables. Finally the Spanish trail was found, but simultaneously a large boat was discovered and the start was made for Basey. The report says:

"The men, realizing that all was over, and that they were safe and once more near home, gave up, some quietly wept, others laughed hysterically. Most of the men had no shoes, cut, torn, bruised and dilapidated, they had marched without murmur for 29 days and had accomplished what no white troops had done before; they thought not of it, but of each other."

LYNCHED AND HANGED.

Murderer of Leonard Calvitt Strung Up By a Mob.

Natchez. Miss., March 20.—John Woodward, the negro murderer of Leonard Calvitt, a white planter, at Union Point, Concordia Parish, La., was lynched early yesterday within 300 yards of the parish prison, in Vidalia, La. The mob gained admittance to the jail by claiming they had a prisoner from Caiahoula parish. After the door was opened they demanded Woodward. Jailer Suchs refused to surrender him and was overpowered.

A member of his family, fearing the mob would do him violence, gave up the key to Woodward's cell. Woodward pleaded for life, but he was taken to a tree and hanged. The negro was about 25 years old and had stolen some cotton from Calvitt. On Feb. 17 he confessed the theft and promised Calvitt to make restitution if the latter would go to his (Woodward's) house, and Calvitt did so, but when he appeared the negro killed him.

Fifty-seven lots were offered, including imported animals bred by the queen of England, J. Dean Willis of Wiltshire, England; A. M. Gordon, Aberdeenshire, Scotland; C. E. Wodehouse, Hertford, England, and other noted Scotch and English breeders. Cattle men from all parts of the country attended the sale, which included some of the best cattle ever offered in a sale ring.

Jealous Husband Kills Wife.

Boston, March 20.—A special to the Globe from Pittsfield, Mass., says that Henry Nye shot and killed his wife at their home at Stephentown, Rensslaer county, New York, Tuesday night. Jealousy is said to have prompted the deed. The couple had been married but six months. Nye has thus far eluded a posse of citizens who are searching for him.

An Important Decision.

Marquette, Mich., March 20.—Circuit Judge Stone filed a decision in a taxation case of importance throughout the state. It was in a suit brought by Marquette against the Michigan Land & Iron Co., to enforce the payment of taxes on land and timber contracts which, it is claimed, was an asset properly assessable. The court decides that the contracts are a credit which can be taxed, and has given judgment for the amount involved, $1,850.

THEIR SYMPATHY

House Democrats Express It for the Boers.

SENTIMENT WAS UNDIVIDED

They Resolve That Congress Should Express Sympathy and Appeal to Britain—Want Neutrality, However, Strictly Maintained.

Washington, March 20.—The democratic members of the house, at a caucus held last night, unanimously adopted resolutions declaring that congress should express the sympathy of the American people for the struggling Boer republics and pledging themselves to use their utmost endeavors to "force" the committees to report resolutions expressive of such sympathy in only that congress might have an opportunity to act.

The committee asks resolutions to investigate the franchise question which was not considered at last night's caucus. Rep. Hay of Virginia presided at the caucus and Rep. Robertson of Louisiana acted as secretary. The attendance was large. There was no division of sentiment as to the course to be taken, the question presented being simply one of choice between two resolutions, one offered by Mr. Randall of Texas and the other by Mr. Sulzer of New York.

The Randall resolution was as follows:

"Resolved, By the democratic members of the house of representatives of the United States of America, in caucus assembled, that the congress of the United States should, by resolution, express the sympathy of the people of the United States for the people of the South African republic and the Orange Free State in their heroic struggle to maintain their liberty and independence.

"Resolved, That the congress should, in the spirit of amity and friendship, appeal to the British government, in the interest of humanity, to accept overtures for peace, cease hostilities and endeavor to bring about a just and honorable settlement of existing differences to the end that peace may be established.

"Resolver, That the United States should fairly and honorably maintain a position of strict neutrality in this contest between nations friendly to us, and see to it that the neutrality laws are vigorously and impartially enforced.

"Resolved, That we, as democrats and representatives of the people, will use our utmost endeavor to force the committees now dominated by the republican party, having in their charge resolutions similar to these, to report the same back to the house so that the congress may give expression thereon declaring the sentiments and will of the American people."

After some remarks by Mr. Randall, Mr. Sulzer and Mr. Cochran of Missouri, the Sulzer resolution was voted down, 32 to 25, and the Randall resolution was then unanimously adopted. In pursuance of the action taken at the caucus last night, a resolution will be framed for introduction into the house, and hereafter the democrats will do everything in their power to secure action upon it.

New Tariff for Switzerland.

Washington, March 20.—The state department has made public a synopsis of the projected new tariff of Switzerland, which had been transmitted by United States Minister Hardy at Berne, in a report dated Feb. 20. The new schedule of duties contains 1,123 articles, as against 723 for the conventional tariff and 476 for the tariff now in force. The minister notes a marked increase in the rates on 500 of these 1,123 articles, especially in the case of agricultural products or their imitations, natural and artificially treated wines, fresh and dried grapes, cattle, meats, poultry, butter, margarine, cheese, etc.

Islands to Get Benefit of Tax.

Washington, March 20.—Secretary Root has notified Acting Governor Wright that taxes and duties collected in the Philippines under the recent tariff act for the islands shall be covered directly into the Philippine treasury and are subject to the orders, of the Philippine authorities. Nothing has as yet been determined upon with respect to the handling and transfer of the duties and taxes collected in the United States on articles imported from the islands. The law provides that all these taxes and duties are to be paid into the Philippine treasury for the use and benefit of the islands.

Men and Stock Perished.

Bismarck, N. D., March 20.—Reports of loss of live stock in the storm have begun to come in. Joe Allen, a ranchman, was found near Sterling so badly frozen that it is feared he cannot recover. One of his horses was dead and the other has not been found. William H. Bratton of Sterling lost 100 cattle and several hundred sheep. A ranchman named Cook lost 50 cattle. William Wilton lost 400 sheep. A band of 5,000 sheep in the western part of the state were turned out to graze the day before the storm. The herder perished with his flock.

Turkey Refuses to Pay.

London, March 20.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co. from Constantinople says: The Turkish government has flatly refused the demand of the United States for the repayment of the sum of money ($72,500) paid to the brigands as a ransom for Miss Ellen M. Stone and her companion, Mme. Tsilka.

Hetty Green a Widow.

Bellows Falls, Vt., March 20.—Edward Green, husband of Hetty Green, known as the richest woman in America, is dead at his home here. He had been ill for a long time of a complication of diseases.

A Would-Be Murderer.

Stephenson, Mich., March 19.—Actuated by a desire to murder, Myron Seymour, a well-to-do farmer of this place, drove to the residence of his cousin and. entering the house, shot Mrs. Seymour without a word of warning. The bullet struck her in the face and the wound is considered mortal. Seymour at once drove away at great speed and the officers were notified. They are in pursuit, and it is thought the man cannot escape.

"THE TIN SOLDIER"

Is Manner in Which Tarvin Refered to Roosevelt.

SPOKE TO PONTIAC DEMS.

Jefferson Banquet Last Night Was Attended by 400 of the Faithful—Many Other Prominent Leaders Were in Attendance.

Pontiac, Mich., March 20.—Over 400 faithful democrats attended the Jefferson club banquet in the Pontiac opera house here last night. After an invocation by Rev. A. O. Stevens, Clyde McGee of Farmington was introduced by Harry Snowden, president of the club, as toastmaster.

The first speaker of the evening was Hon. William E. Carpenter of Waterford. He spoke on "Tendencies of the times as seen from a farmer's standpoint."

James P. Tarvin of Kentucky gave the most eloquent address of the evening on "The true democracy of Lincoln and Altgeld." He reveiwed his early life and told how he had always considered Lincoln as the cause of all trouble in the south.

"However," he said, "I look upon him as the greatest jurist, the highest and loveliest character America has ever produced. His democracy was the democracy of Lincoln."

He referred to President Roosevelt as the "tin soldier," and said that the only vote of which he was ever ashamed he cast for Grover Cleveland. In speaking of the policy of the democratic party, he said:

"Put to the best use the talents that God has given you. That is what Bryan contended for—that is all Altgeld died for, and that is the platform we shall go forth with again in 1904." In reviewing the career of the republican party he said:

"In 1873 the republican congress, by 29 words, hid in a bill long enough to reach from this platform to the front of this hall, demonitized silver. They did it secretly and treacherously, and did it in the night time. They debased silver and left the gold standard. Half of the money was taken away one midnight at Washington with only five members of congress who know of the transaction."

"Republican legislation," he continued, "doubled the capital [illegible] 2 per cent, while 98 per cent had [illegible] money. The purpose of this legislation was to enrich a few and impoverish millions."

Mr. Tarvin spoke of the death of Altgeld, and declared that his death was the greatest loss to the country and to democracy since the death of Lincoln. He gave almost [illegible] satirical speech of President Roosevelt and his policy.

Judge Tarvin was followed by T. E. Tarsney of Detroit, who spoke in the absence of George Monaghan. Mr. Tarsney gave a humorous description of the house of representatives at Lansing. His principal theme was the government as controlled by a few people, and he urged upon the democrats to keep the reins of government in their own hands.

Menominee, Mich., March 20.—Two of the Menominee fishermen who were marooned on Chambers island arrived home yesterday after a hard and perilous journey, picking their way on skates around the southern point of Green bay, a distance of nearly 100 miles. They finally made a landing at Peshtigo and came home by land. They say there are still 15 men on the island. The tug Gagnor will start for them today.

ALLEGED INFIDELITY

Are Grounds for Peculiar Divorce Proceedings in Owosso.

Owosso, Mich., March 20.—The divorce case of Eva vs. Gilbert H. Willaughby of Owosso is now in progress at Corunna. The woman daily enters the court room with a crowd of 20 men sympathizers, and Mr. Willoughby has fully 30 women supporters, many of whom are members of the Lady Maccabee lodge, to which orders Mrs. Willoughby belonged, but by which she has been repudiated.

Willoughby charges his wife with infidelity and claims to have warned her several times to turn over a new leaf. He claims she refused, and one night he left her on her father's doorstep with the words, "Take her back; I don't want her." This is the basis of her suit for divorce. Mr. Willoughby has filed a cross bill.

It is said that Willoughby hired two of his friends, before he turned his wife away, to spy on the woman and report her actions. The men failed to report progress, and Willoughby discovered by accident that they had become her friends and allies. The testimony is torrid in spots.

Those who escaped through the blazing stairways had their clothes nearly burned off and hair singed. The fire started from a gasoline can in the second floor flat. A roomer threw the can into the stairway, and all the stairways to the fourth floor were ablaze almost immediately. The fire was under control in 15 minutes, but not before damage to the amount of $8,000 had been caused.

Politicians Had Wordy War.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 20.—In an argument over politics in the Morton house, Frank N. Watson of Owosso, a candidate for the nomination for attorney-general, accused Deputy Attorney-General Chase of working for Charles Blair of Jackson, Watson's rival for the nomination. Chase called Watson a liar and the air was full of fists for an instant, but no blows were landed. The disputants finally apologized, but there will be no let up in the political fight.

Bay City Water Is O. K.

Bay City, Mich., March 20.—According to an analysis of water taken from the city water mains, all the stories of lime in the river killing the fish are declared to be bosh. Life Guards.

The Life Guards are two regiments of cavalry forming part of the British household troops. They are gallant soldiers, and every loyal British heart is proud of them. Not only the king's household, but yours, ours, everybody's should have it's life guards. The need of them is especially great when the greatest foes of life, diseases, find allies in the very elements, as colds, influenza, catarrh, the grip and pneumonia do in the stormy month of March. The best way that we know of to guard against these diseases is to strengthen the system with Hood's Sarsaparilla—the greatest of all life guards. It removes the conditions in which those diseases make their most successful attack, gives vigor and tone to all the vital organs and functions, and imparts a genial warmth to the blood. Remember the weaker the system the greater the exposure to disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the system strong.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

By local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Halls' Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

CHAPTER VI.

WHAT JAMES KNEW ABOUT THE PAST.

It is not necessary to describe in detail the discovery of the body of Burr Pendleton or the effect that the discovery and its consequences produced upon the community and particularly upon those who knew him intimately.

The mysterious disappearance of the servant James pointed the finger of suspicion in his direction and naturally diverted it from other suggestions. Not even a faint indication of such a thing attaching to Craig Wyndham was heard or thought.

The coroner's jury found that death had been caused by a dagger in the hands of one James Ferguson, valet to the deceased, and every effort of the police was exerted to bring about his capture, but even such a sensational affair was soon partially forgotten, and the newspaper comments diminished from columns to paragraphs and then ceased altogether.

The day after the funeral Pendleton's lawyer sent for Wyndham and told him of a will in his possession by which Craig Wyndham was made sole legatee of all the property that Pendleton had owned. It directed him to pay to James Ferguson a stated annuity as long as he lived, and there were several minor bequests of like nature. The will also contained the following clause:

"I make also the following express wish: With this my last will and testament I will place in the hands of my attorney a certain sealed envelope which will be delivered into the hands of my legatee and executor, Craig Wyndham, as soon as convenient after he has been made aware of the contents of this my will. The contents of the envelope aforesaid will explain to my executor certain duties which I desire him to perform in the event of my death and which I believe he will perform to the best of his ability and which, for reasons of my own, I do not care to embody in this document. I do, however, consider it just that I should here ask pardon for placing such grave responsibilities upon him and also for keeping secret from him the fact that I have done so."

The will was drawn and executed immediately before Pendleton departed for Mexico, and only the lawyer who drew it and Pendleton himself was aware of its contents. Inasmuch [illegible] Burr Pendleton had no near relati[illegible] the will was probated without [illegible]tion, and Craig Wyndham found [illegible]self suddenly a very rich man.

In the meantime he met Escudera frequently at [illegible] club, on the street and in divers places. Indeed it seemed to him that it was the intention of the Mexican to throw himself constantly in his way, but between them on the occasion of such meetings there was always exhibited the utmost cordiality.

Escudera retained his quasi membership in the club, and always Wyndham watched him furtively while he awaited replies to certain inquiries he had sent out to Mexico and to other places. It seemed to him that Escudera had the air of one who was killing time as best he could while he awaits the happening of some expected event, but what that event might be Wyndham could not even conjecture.

The interview between Wyndham and old James had taken place—in fact, several of them—but at this point it is necessary only to refer to one of them.

They had, as usual, at such times been engaged in discussing the incidents that had happened to Pendleton in Mexico and for the third or fourth time referred to the duel. Wyndham had already connected the name of Romero with that of Escudera and was of the opinion the two were related.

"Did you ever see the man with whom your master fought the duel?" he asked of James.

"Yes, sir; I saw him two or three times."

"Did the man who was with Mr. Pendleton the evening we found him resemble the duelist at all?"

"Not at all, that I remember."

"Now, James, go back to the moment you first knew that a duel was to be fought. How did you know about it?"

"Mr. Burr told me."

"Tell me how he told you; tell me just what he said."

"He asked me if I remembered an incident that occurred one afternoon on the Paseo when he defended a lady from the attentions of a man who had offended her. I"—

"Tell me about that incident, James."

"We were on the Paseo together, walking. I was a few feet behind Mr. Pendleton. We were near what is known as the Indian statue, which is located rather farther up the avenue than pedestrians usually go. A little way in advance of us was a lady and her maidservant. When we got near the statue, a man appeared suddenly from behind it or one of the big cypress trees, I don't know which. He walked rapidly toward the lady, and she stopped still, as if she were frightened, but I do not know if that was the reason, although I think it must have been."

"What time of day was that, James?"

"About 5 o'clock in the afternoon. The sun was shining, and there were hundreds of people within call; so I do not think the man really meant anything like violence."

"Well, go ahead. What happened then?"

"The lady was a hundred feet or so in advance of us when the man confronted her. We were walking slowly toward them. Whether Mr. Pendleton was looking at them or not I do not know, but I was, for I thought the actions of both rather strange. I noticed that they talked rather excitedly and that they seemed to be known to each other. In the meantime we were drawing nearer to them. We had almost reached them when the lady turned suddenly away, as if to leave the man, and he reached out and seized her by the arm.

"That was more than Mr. Pendleton could stand, as you know, sir. He stopped instantly, raised his hat, addressed the lady in Spanish, as though he had known her all his life, and at the same time utterly ignored the man. As for him, he hesitated an instant, and I never saw such a fiendish expression on the face of a man as that which swept over his at that instant. But he did not say a word. Instead he turned away and walked rapidly down the avenue.

"The lady murmured a few words to Mr. Pendleton. I think they were words of thanks. He raised his hat, said two words in reply, and we continued on our way.

"That, sir, is all there was of that incident, but the man who afterward insulted my master and thus compelled him to send a challenge was the same man, Captain Romero, who is called the deadliest duelist in Mexico; so you see, sir, there must have been some connection between the two affairs."

"Undoubtedly, James."

"And now, sir, if you will permit me to surmise a little, I have an idea."

"Let me hear it, by all means."

"The evening before the duel Mr. Pendleton was busy for some time preparing his affairs. Then he went out, ostensibly to the opera, but I know he did not go there, for about midnight or a little after Captain Agramonte, who was to be his second, called and told me so, inquiring for him. The following morning I received a note in his handwriting telling me to defer all action twenty-four hours longer than he had told me to do when he went away, and the note was brought by the same person who on the preceding day delivered one to my master in the pateo of the hotel just as we were going out for luncheon, and, sir, what is more important, it was the same person who came to me a few hours before Mr. Pendleton's return and gave me a verbal message to have everything packed and in readiness. That last message I am sure my master did not send.

"I know that Mr. Pendleton engaged in the duel with Captain Romero, and I know that he shot him, for I heard him ask Captain Agramonte just before our train left the station about the condition of Romero. It is my opinion, sir, that the lady who was doubtless the real cause of the duel sent for him that evening when he was to go to the opera, and I believe that she tried to prevent the meeting. This is only guesswork, sir, but I cannot help thinking that the duel was a consequence of that encounter on the Paseo, and that the murder of Mr. Pendleton is somehow related to both affairs."

"No doubt, James; no doubt whatever. But I believe we may go back even farther than that and say that all three of the occurrences grew out of the causes of your master's journey to Mexico. We will have to search farther back than the encounter on the Paseo for the motive for the taking of the life of Burr Pendleton. James, was this trip you made with Burr the first time you had been to Mexico?"

James hesitated and looked away for a moment. Then, more to himself than to his companion, he said:

"It can do no harm for me to tell about it now."

"It is your duty to tell everything that will help me to clear up this mystery," said Wyndham sharply. "That was your second visit to Mexico, then?"

"My third, sir."

"Indeed! Tell me about the others."

"I was there twice, sir, with the father of Mr. Burr, but I promised him that I would never speak about it, sir, to anybody, and I never have until now."

"Not even to Burr?"

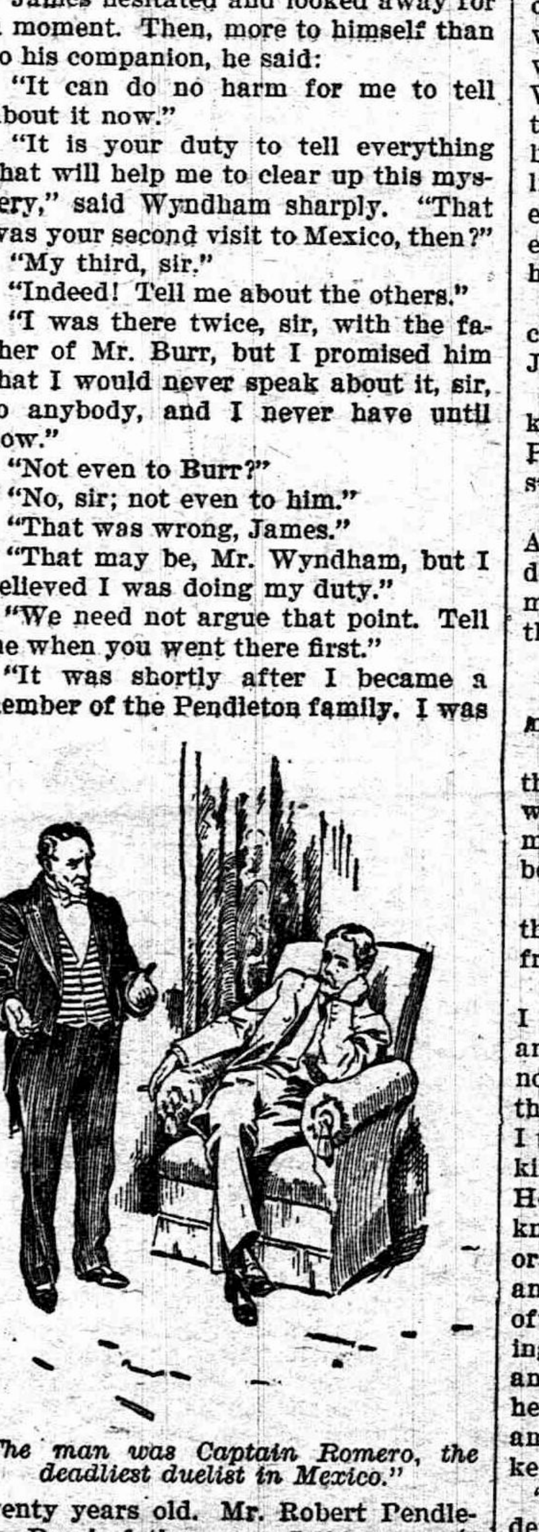
"No, sir; not even to him."

"That was wrong, James."

"That may be, Mr. Wyndham, but I believed I was doing my duty."

"We need not argue that point. Tell me when you went there first."

"It was shortly after I became a member of the Pendleton family. I was twenty years old. Mr. Robert Pendleton, Burr's father, was, I think, about thirty. It was during the same winter when Burr's mother died."



"The man was Captain Romero, the deadliest duelist in Mexico."

"How old was Burr?"

"Not quite two years, sir."

"Well, what took you there?"

"Mr. Robert Pendleton had some business there that had been left by his father. I do not know much about that, sir, for I always tried to keep my place and to mind my own affairs. He intended when he started to remain only a short time, but we were in the City of Mexico three months, and I saw very little of my master during that time. We had rooms at the Hotel Iturbide, where I remained, but Mr. Pendleton was rarely there either day or night, and I only know that his time was passed at a house in Tacubaya, at a fine residence which he told me he had purchased, but which he subsequently disposed of."

"When and how?"

"That I do not know, sir."

"Why did he buy the house and why did he pass his time there instead of at his rooms in the hotel?"

"I did not know until long afterward, Mr. Wyndham, but the fact is he had fallen in love with a Mexican lady and married her."

"Ah, I begin to see daylight, James. Tell me all you know about that event."

"I know very little—only that he married within a month after we arrived in Mexico and therefore within four months of the death of Mr. Burr's mother. Perhaps it was for that reason that he insisted upon keeping the matter a profound secret and made me promise that I would never refer to our visits there to anybody under any circumstances. I have kept that promise until today, sir."

"Do you think that Burr knew of this second marriage of his father, James?"

"I am quite sure that he did not, sir."

"I mean at the time he went to Mexico—at any time before his death."

"I do not think he ever knew of it, Mr. Wyndham."

"Do you know the family name of the lady who became Mrs. Pendleton?"

"No, sir, and, besides, there is another thing, sir, which may be important—the lady was never known as Mrs. Pendleton. We traveled in Mexico under another name, but I cannot tell you that name, Mr. Wyndham, because I have forgotten it."

"Forgotten it, James?"

"Yes, sir, I have forgotten it."

Wyndham did not believe this statement, but no amount of argument could induce James to change his reply to the question, and it was finally abandoned.

"Tell me about your second trip there, James," he proceeded.

"We were called there by the illness of the lady who was Mr. Pendleton's wife. She died and was buried before we arrived. He was greatly shocked. We did not remain very long—about ten days, I think. I saw very little of him then, as before. He did not seem like himself at all, and he never recovered from the shock. Although he lived many years afterward, it affected him until his death."

"Was there a child or were there children by that second marriage, James?"

"No, sir—that is, I don't really know, but I think not. I think Mr. Pendleton would have told me had such been the case."

"Let me sum this business up a little. According to your statements, Mr. Pendleton lived with his second wife two months and then came north again. Is that right?"

"About that, sir."

"How long after that was it that you made the second trip to Mexico?"

"About a year—a little more than that, I think. No, sir, pardon me; it was something less than a year. My memory is not as clear as it used to be."

"How do you account for the fact that he remained so long a time away from his bride?"

"I hardly know how to reply to that. I know that he was very fond of her, and it is my belief that when we came north and left her there he expected that she would follow him very soon. I think there was some trouble of some kind, but I never knew what it was. He was overwhelmed with business. I know that he received letters from her, or at least from Mexico, constantly, and I know that he wrote to her very often. I think it likely that her coming was delayed from week to week and that he refrained from going to her during that year at her request. I am sure that nothing else could have kept him here waiting."

"He did not take you into his confidence in this matter, then?"

"No, sir; only concerning the marriage itself."

"Did you ever see the lady?"

"Never, sir."

"Nor a picture of her?"

"I did not."

"I wish you could remember the name under which your master lived in Mexico, James."

"I am sorry that I cannot," replied the old man obstinately, "but it has gone from me entirely. I would not recognize it even if I should hear it."

It was plain to Wyndham that James had determined that he would not reveal the name and had adopted the plan of forgetfulness as the best means of avoiding argument, and the old man's resolution could be accounted for in only one way, which was that he had given an absolute promise that he would never tell it.

"Robert Pendleton must have had a strong reason for binding his servant to such inviolate secrecy," mused Wyndham, "and he also must have had a strong reason for adopting it in the first place."

Repairing Neatly Done

Never thought of such a sign for a medicine did you? Well, it's a good sign for Scott's Emulsion. The body has to be repaired like other things and Scott's Emulsion is the medicine that does it.

These poor bodies wear out from worry, from over-work, from disease. They get thin and weak. Some of the new ones are not well made—and all of the old ones are racked from long usage.

Scott's Emulsion fixes all kinds. It does the work both inside and out. It makes soft bones hard, thin blood red, weak lungs strong, hollow places full. Only the best materials are used in the patching and the patches don't show through the new glow of health.

No one has to wait his turn. You can do it yourself—you and the bottle.

This picture represents the Trade Mark of Scott's Emulsion and is on the wrapper of every bottle.

Would Smash the Club.

Thousands of once hopeless sufferers from consumption, pneumonia, bronchitis owe their lives and health to it. It conquers grip, saves little ones from croup and whooping cough and is positively guaranteed for all throat and lung troubles, 50c, $1.00 Trial bottle free at C. A. Wright's.

The Vested Choir.

Many people attended the evening service at the Episcopal church Sunday, the attraction being a vested choir. About thirty members in their vestments filled the choir pews, the interior of the church having been arranged so that the choir could occupy both sides of the pulpit. A vested choir is quite a novelty to church going people of Tecumseh and will no doubt prove a drawing card for the Episcopal church.

To those who read the above article last week I wish to say for the members of St. Peter's church, that we have not introduced the vestments for our choir as a drawing card. It is a custom adopted by the church hundreds of years ago and is a part of the service, to which it adds dignity and solemnity.

We are fortunate in having voices in Tecumseh that have expressed a willingness to assist in the service and have therefore organized a vested choir and hereafter intend it to aid in the service of St. Peter's, as it does in the church at other places. While to some it may be an attraction, we have introduced it to only make stronger, a most impressive service, to which we extend a cordial invitation to all.

Respectfully,
L. C. HAYDEN, Sec. of Vestry.

NYE--PARKS

Happy home wedding took place at the bride's home on Maumee street

LAST EVENING

Miss Martha Parks and Mr. Olla Nye united for life.

The marriage of Miss Martha Parks and Mr. Olia Nye was solemnized last evening at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Parks, on Maumee street.

Promptly at 7:30 the bridal party marched into the parlor, unattended, and took their position before the minister. The bride was becomingly attired in a gown of blue cloth trimmed with white taffeta silk. The groom wore the conventional black.

The services were very impressively conducted by Rev. W. F. Jones, pastor of the Presbyterian church, in the presence of forty relatives and friends. After congratulations the guests partook of an excellent supper. The bride and groom were recipients of many handsome and useful presents.

Miss Parks has always lived in Tecumseh is well and favorably known and is held in high esteem by her many friends. Mr. Nye is a brakeman on the Detroit Southern and has gained many friends during his stay here.

Van Valkenburg—Lanning

A very pretty home wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. M. Van Valkenburg in Franklin Thurs day afternoon March 20, the contracting parties being their daughter, Miss Pearl E. and Mr. Bert L. Lanning.

Promptly at 2:30 Mrs. F. N. Miller began to play Mendelssohn's wedding march and the bridal party led by Rev. Leslie Bower filed into the spacious parlor which was handsomely trimmed for the occasion, where in the presence of one hundred guests the solemn words were pronounced uniting two happy hearts in the bonds of holy wedlock. After most hearty congratulations a bountiful repast was served.

The bride was dressed in white and carried pink carnations. The groom is one of Franklin's promising young farmers. The presents were numerous and useful.

The guests from abroad were Mr. and Mrs. Fred Aten and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Aten, of Macon; Mrs. Chas. Gove, of Ridgeway; Mrs. Chas. Dibble, of Adrian; Mr. and Mrs. Isaiah Mattis, of Clinton; Mrs. Chas. VanValkenburg, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Cooler. of Iron Creek, and Mrs. Chas. Aten, a great aunt of the groom. Mr. and Mrs. Lanning will settle at once on a farm in the south part of Franklin.

ROUND ABOUT US.

LITERARY NOTES

The distinction of the March number of McClure's Magazine lies no less in the remarkably well considered variety of its contents than in the excellence of individual articles. Three very timely and yet very different articles are Carl Snyders's account of the wonderful medical discoveries of Professor Loeb of the Chicago University, which two months ago started the whole scientific world, and which are now first clearly and soundly treated in popular form.

* * *

The most incisive and most keenly analytical sketches of public men which have been prepared during the past two years have been those of William Allen White. The humorous little episode between Mr. White and Mr. Thomas C. Platt is still fresh in the public memory Mr. White's sketch for March appears in the Cosmopolitan and is on the late President Harrison.

* * *

Most appropriate and artistic is the cover of the Designer for April, whereon is pictured a graceful feminine figure with Easter doves and lillies. The contents are also typical of the season, and among them may be mentioned a short story, "An Easter Miracle," "Pretty Trifles for Easter Gifts" and "Easter Egg Football" the latter being a jolly game for young folks.

For variety and interest, both literary and pictorial, the March Critic, bids fair to rank as an exceptional issue. Prominent among the illustrated contributions are "Ecce Ibsen!" by Mr. Christian Brinton, "The Great German Reviews," by Herr Wolf von Schierbrand and Miss Charlotte Harwood's "Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett at Home."

A careful review of the book impresses one that it is a valued contribution to the history of these early pioneers, and a copy should be in every library. Price, 25 cents per copy. IT'S IMPOSSIBLE

Nothing by the way of an introduction could be added to their experiences and opinions given below, which could increase their value. Tecumseh people can safely be left to draw their own conclusions based on such convincing proof as this citizen offers. What is there lacking in evidence like this to satisfy a dyed-in-the-wool doubting Thomas?

Mr. Henry Keyser, retired farmer and capitalist, place of residence in the southwestern section of Tecumseh says: "I am thoroughly convinced of the superior merits of this poplar remedy, Doan's Kidney Pills. They deserve naught save the highest praise. Before going to C. A. Wright's drug store for a box I had a dull aching pain in my back which annoyed me for some time and the secretions from the kidneys were irregular and unnatural. To say that I was surprised at the effect is putting it very mildly. In a very short time the trouble disappeared. I never knew a medicine that worked so quickly and satisfactorly."

For sale by all dealers: Price 50 cents per box, Foster-Milburn company, Buffalo. N. Y., sole agents for the United States. Remember the name Doan's and take no substitute.

There is nothing like good, common sense in the affairs of life.

BEYOND A DOUBT.

Good Hard Facts Told in a Few Words as Possible.

Mrs. Edgar Packard, of Tecumseh, Mich., says: "Until I tried Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Pills sold at Chas. A. Wright's drug store, I suffered a great deal from nervousness, sleeplessness, headaches and indigestion. Since using the pills I can say my nervous system has been toned up, I sleep well, the headaches are gone and my digestion is greatly improved. I think the pills a fine nerve medicine."

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Pills are sold at 50c a box at dealers or Dr. A. W. Chase Medicine Co., Buffalo, N. Y. See that portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M. D., are on every package.

Supreme Court Got After the Justices on Tramp Question.

Lansing, Mich., March 19.—The supreme court, in its opinion in the cases of Frederick S. Hutchinson and James Curry vs. the board of supervisors of Ionia county, sat down hard upon the tramp industry, which reaches aggravating proportions in that county.

Hutchinson and Curry, justices of the peace, presented bills for services in the alleged trials of tramps. The supervisors refused to allow the bills, claiming that the justices had not complied with the statutes, and furthermore, that there was collusion between the justices and the police officers. The circuit court found that the justices were entitled to their fees, and so ordered, whereupon the supervisors appealed to the supreme court.

The officers who made the arrests were constables and police officers of Ionia city. It appears that the prosecuting attorney refused to give a written order allowing these arrests, and the justices, therefore, required security for costs. The bonds were signed in blank by one surety and left with the justices. The constables made the complaints, and when a prisoner was arraigned the justice would simply fill out one of the blank bonds and proceed to send the prisoner to jail.

The court holds that where bonds in criminal cases are signed in blank by a surety and left with the officer of the law to fill in and use as he sees fit, they are not a compliance with the statute providing that "no warrant shall issue unless security for costs shall have been filed with said justice," and the Ionia county custom is declared to be a clear evasion of the statutes.

Another important feature of this case was that in their reports to the prosecuting attorney, the justices made a statement of their own fees, but did not make a statement of the fees of the officers making the arrests, claiming that the latter was not required by the statute. The court holds that both fees must be set forth.

It further appeared that the justices did not examine their dockets to ascertain whether the offenders had been previously convicted, but treated them all as first offenders, whereas the statute provies longer sentences in case of second or third offenses. It was evident that the justices ignored this important statute, which, if enforced, would, in the opinion of the court, do much to prevent drunkenness and the various disorderly acts which are made criminal under such statute.

The opinion of the circuit court was reversed, and a judgment entered here for the supervisors.

Shot at His Reflection.

Niles, Mich., March 19.—Officer Metcalf found the side door of I. Harris's store open at an early hour Monday morning. The officer entered the store and as he did so saw his form reflected in a large mirror. Thereupon three shots rang out in quick succession and the mirror was shattered into fragments before the officer discovered his mistake. Harris had forgotten to close the side door when he left the store.

Ann Arbor, Mich., March 19.—The Washington's birthday celebration committee announces a surplus of $50 from the funds collected, and it will be used for the purchasing of a steel etching of Washington to be presented to William Jennings Bryan, who was the speaker of the day.

Charles M. Goodale of Jackson, 50 years old, a carpenter, was taken suddenly ill and died a few hours later Wednesday. Goodale had a weak heart, and it is thought a headache powder killed him.

Why a Limpet Sticks.

The limpet has gained notoriety by the strength with which it adheres to the rock on which it decides to rest. The force required to detach the limpet from the rock has lately been tested by a well known naturalist, who found that more than sixty pounds must be exerted for the purpose. So this little thing, weighing about half an ounce, sticks so tightly that a force equal to two thousand times its own weight is necessary to drag it away.

It was at one time supposed that atmospheric pressure had something to do with the adhesive power of the limpet, but it is now generally agreed that the creature exudes a kind of glue for this purpose. If you place your finger on the rock immediately after a limpet has been detached, you will feel that the surface is sticky, and if you allow your finger to remain there for a short time you will notice that it is beginning to stick quite tightly.—Pearson's.

Unappreciative.

A certain politician, eminent but not refined, made Samuel J. Tilden a business call at his Gramercy Park mansion. Wishing to be particularly nice to him, the old gentleman got out a bottle of Johannisberger Schloss, the rarest of Rhine wines, and began to decant the contents into a minute glass, sniffing the savor of the juice and taking great pains to indicate that a treat was coming. A tray with some large glasses was at hand. The politician reached for one and, grasping the precious bottle by the neck, dumped half the contents into it and drank it all at one gulp. Mr. Tilden eyed him malevolently and did not try to prolong the visit. When the door closed behind the guest, he said with a snap: "Blast him! The next time he comes I'll give him beer."—New York World.

Fly Fishing.

There is no doubt that certain flies are best adapted to different seasons, times of day and conditions of weather, but a dozen flies of different names will fully answer all of these requirements. An angler's flies resemble nothing when cast upon the water. They are simply a something which attracts the trout. Color has more allurement than form, and as there are not so many colors there is no use for many flies. The general rule is for light flies on dark days and dark or darkish flies on light days. Sizes are more to be considered than form and mixture, in makeup. A large trout wants something worth his making an effort to secure. It is doubtless true that an arbitrary cast of flies cannot be made up which will be adapted to all waters.

Savages, so far as known, are exempt from cancer.

WHY NOT BUILD?

We Mean a Reconstruction of Your Bodily Health.

Fellow-citizens, we can give you a word of good advice that we believe will interest you.

There is nothing in this world better to build one up quicker than VINOL. We know it is a most wonderful body builder.

VINOL is not a patent medicine but a scientific preparation that contains all the active curative principles of the cod's liver, the same medicinal elements that made cod liver oil famous. It has, however, none of the drawbacks of cod liver oil, for from VINOL has been discarded the obnoxious grease that tasted so badly and acted in such a detrimental manner on the stomach.

Read this letter from Bangor, Maine. "After an attack of the Grippe, I was so run down, weak and miserable that I could not go out of the house or do any work. When in this condition I heard of VINOL and decided to give it a trial. VINOL made a well man of me. A. S. AMAZEEN, 2 Birch St., Bangor, Me."

Remember we sell VINOL on a guarantee to refund the price paid for it if it does not do everything we claim it will.

Does It Pay to Buy Cheap?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the more severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible for you, then in either case take the ONLY remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung trouble, "Boschee's German Syrup." It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest, and cures the patient. Try one bottle. Recommended many years by all druggists in the world. Get Green's Prize Almanac at J. J. Orr's.

NOW LOOK OUT!

"Take care of yourself," say our friends. "I'll try to," we answer. We do take a little care, yet in spite of warm clothes, rubbers and mackintoshes, an army of people were bowled out by pneumonia and other lung and chest diseases last winter. They caught cold, neglected it, let it fix upon them, were torn by coughs, choked by inflammations and congestions, wasted by fever, tired out by pain and then gave up the fight. The hour you realize that you have a cold on the chest, place a Benson's Porous Plaster where the pain or oppression is felt. If you think two are needed make it two. No harm if you were covered with them. They act quickly and prevent the engorgment of blood in the organs. In this way—with ordinary caution as to exposure—you will break up the cold and avoid a serious sickness. No other applications, or any other form of treatment, will accomplish this as certainly and speedily. Benson's Plasters have a distinct and positive action and are curative to the highest degree. Use them with the same confidence for coughs, muscular rheumatism, the grip (back and chest) and all similar ailments. Women, who are chief sufferers from cold weather complaints, should keep these plasters always within reach. Get the genuine. All druggists, or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on receipt of 25c. each.

CONGRESS' BUSY DAY

Senate Passed Two Bills and House One, Yesterday.

PROTECTION BILL NOW A LAW

Senate Acts Faborably On It—Also Indorses Bill for Repeal of War Revenue Taxes—House Passes River and Harbor Bill.

Washington, March 22.—Two important measures were passed by the senate yesterday, the bill for the repeal of the war revenue taxes and that for the protection of the president of the United States. The revenue bill was passed without division and after only one short speech. Mr. Tillman embraced the opportunity afforded by the bill's consideration to protest against the repeal of the duty of 10 cents a pound upon tea.

The bill for the protection of the president was under discussion during the greater part of the session. Mr. Patterson (Colo.) made an extended speech in opposition to it, and Mr. Fairbanks (Ind.) advocated it in a forceful address. All amendments offered to the measure were rejected, and it was passed by a vote of 52 to 15.

The bill provides that any person within the United States who shall wilfully and maliciously kill the president or any officer on whom the duties of president may devolve, or any sovereign of a foreign country, or shall attempt to kill any of the persons named, shall suffer death; that any person who shall aid, abet, advise or counsel the killing of any of the persons named or shall conspire to accomplish their death, shall be imprisoned not exceeding 20 years; that any person who shall threaten to kill or advise or counsel another to kill the president or any official upon whom the duties of president may devolve, shall be imprisoned not exceeding 10 years; that any person who shall wilfully aid in the escape of any person guilty of any of the offenses named shall be deemed an accomplice and shall be punished as a principal. The secretary of war is directed to detail from the regular army a guard of officers and men to protect the president "without any unnecessary display," and the secretary is authorized to make regulations as to the dress, arms and equipment and duties of such guards.

The house yesterday passed the river and harbor bill, which has been under consideration throughout the week. Although several minor amendments were adopted, not a single dollar was added to the measure, and as passed it carried exactly what it did when it came from the committee—$60,688,267, including authorizations. Mr. Sulzer (N. Y.) attempted to force a record vote on the final passage of the bill, but only three members, Messrs. Smith (Iowa), Fitzgerald (N. Y.) and Cochran (Mo.) supported him.

Houses Fell In.

New York, March 22.—Park avenue, this city, yesterday was again the scene of an accident which, while it entailed no loss of life, caused a property loss of considerable proportions. The brown stone fronts of several four-story private houses on the east side of the avenue sank because of the undermining of the foundations by excavations for the rapid transit tunnel. The first serious cave-in occurred when the sidewalk in the rear of 55 Park avenue sank to a considerable depth, leaving the front wall with no support and exposing the cellar. The houses on either side of No. 55 were also rendered unsafe. Later in the afternoon there occurred a further settling of the walls and sidewalks, and the residents on the east side of the block were ordered by the police to leave their homes.

Gov. Taft Is Popular.

Washington, March 22.—Secretary Root has received a characteristic letter from Mr. Felipe Buencamino, who was one of the leaders in the original Philippine government under Aguinaldo and is now a member of the Philippine civil service commission and a staunch friend of the United States government: "Permit me," he says, "to offer you my congratulations for your policy over my people in Philippine islands. In my people's name, I request that you send promptly hereto Gov. Taft." The officials are highly gratified at this unsolicited evidence of the appreciation by the friendly Filipinos of the efforts of Gov. Taft to ameliorate their condition and give them a good government.

Steamer Huronian Believed Lost.

St. Johns, N. F. March 22.—The incoming shipping brings no reports of the Allen line steamer Huronian, Capt. Brodie, from Glasgow Feb. 11 for St. John, and now about one month overdue. It is generally believed in marine circles here that the Huronian founded with all hands, or that she sank as a result of colliding with ice in the North Atlantic. There is a bare possibility she has been caught in the ice floes and that her crew has been rescued by some sealing steamer, as happened in the case of another steamship a few years ago. This, however, is thought to be very unlikely.

His Momentary Surprise.

"Your vote in favor of this measure," said the lobbyist, "would be worth millions to you"—

"Hardly so much as that!" gasped Senator Graphter, his fingers working convulsively.

—"in the consciousness of having done your duty to your countrymen."

The eager light died out of the senator's eyes, and he relapsed into his former apathy.—Chicago Tribune.

Killed Under Load of Logs.

Petoskey, Mich., March 22.—Frank Cassidy, a prominent farmer of Bliss township, was killed Friday by the overturning of a load of logs which he was hauling to Sturgeon Bay.

Can't keep It Secret.

The splendid work of Dr. King's New Life Pills is daily coming to light. No such grand remedy for liver and bowel troubles was ever known before. Thousands bless them for curing constipation sick headache, biliousness, jaundice and indigestion. Try them. 25c at C. A Wright's drug store.

Many are fond of Tapioca, but dislike the trouble of soaking it. Use Mrs. Austin's Quick Lunch Tapioca. No soaking.

KAZOO AND FLINT

Likely to Be the Favored Ones This Year.

IN FOR NEW P. O. BUILDINGS

Senate Will Probably Put the Propositions "Aboard" the Omnibus Bill—Burrows Drops a Word Regarding Senators by Popular Vote.

Washington, March 24.—It is a pretty good guess that the only Michigan building bills the senate committee on public buildings will report out this session are for the postoffice building at Flint and for enlarging the Kalamazoo postoffice building. The committee has already favorably reported a score or so of building bills and it is understood to have practically agreed on a dozen or so more, including two for the Michigan towns named. No more will be reported when this next lot is submitted to the senate. The house has not yet passed any building bills, but the house committee will frame an omnibus bill, and when this bill finally passes it will, according to custom, contain all the senate committee recommends, and probably a few more. But Flint and Kalamazoo are the only two Michigan towns reasonably sure of getting in on the omnibus bill.

The chances of a joint resolution to amend the constitution so that senators will be elected by popular vote seem pretty slim. Senator Burrows, as chairman of the senate committee in charge, says: "I am convinced a large majority of the committee is opposed to the resolution. We shall, however, give the subject a patient hearing. We shall have another meeting to consider it Tuesday, but do not anticipate final action then. When a decision is reached I expect it will be adverse to the proposed change."

Husband Found at Last.

Tekonsha, Mich., March 24.—One of the greatest mysteries connected with the history of Tekonsha has just been solved. June 12, 1901, Orley Hall, a respectable citizen of the village, and a member of the council, disappeared from his home at dead of night. He left a note saying that he was "going on a long journey and would never return; that his grave would never be discovered and that it would be useless to hunt for him." At the time of his disappearance he was just recovering from an operation for appendicitis and could scarcely walk. The community was greatly shocked and mystified over the affair. Two days before his disappearance he carefully inspected his policy and the books of the order to satisfy himself that everything was all right. As no proof of death was obtainable his beneficiary could not recover on the policy. It now transpires that, by some assistance, he managed to get into a hospital, and having recovered his health put in an appearance at Battle Creek Thursday, March 20, being joined by his wife.

Sixty-Six Years Wedded.

Marshall, Mich., March 24.—The 66th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Boehm of this city occurred Sunday. They are not only the oldest married couple living in Calhoun county, but also the oldest couple. Mr. Boehm was born in Germany in 1806 and came to America when a boy. Mrs. Boehm will celebrate her 91st natal day in June. They were married in New York city on march 23, 1836, and came to Marshall in May of that year. The entire trip from New York to this city was made by wagon and consumed several weeks. Mr. Boehm erected one of the first log cabins built in Calhoun county, and today they reside on the place where the log cobin originally stood. Although this worthy old couple are nearing the century mark, they are still quite active.

Drunk in W. C. T. U. Window.

Marshall, Mich., March 24.—A drunken man wandered along State street Saturday until he arrived at the headquarters of the W. C. T. U., where he planted himself in one of the front windows and went to sleep. In the other window a large W. C. T. U. sign was displayed. Prosecutor Hatch has ordered justices and officers not to arrest drunkards unless the complaints are O K'd by him or the party making the complaint puts up security for costs. The result is that few are arrested, while many get drunk.

Ypsi's Paper Mill Closed.

Ypsilanti, Mich., March 24.—The employes of the Peninsular Paper Co. have rejected the terms of the management in regard to the Sunday shift and the plant will close. The company had offered to compromise by closing Saturday at midnight for four weeks, pending a settlement of the difficulty at other mills.

MICHIGAN BRIEFS.

Mt. Clemens is to entertain the Kentucky Press club in July.

John C. Burns, the Pere Marquette station agent at Ruse, is missing.

The farm house of George Andrews, near Mt. Morris, was destroyed by fire Saturday morning. Loss, $1,000.

Another 10 per cent dividend is to be declared by the defunct Niles Savings-bank. This brings it up to 90.

Carnegie has decided to give $10,000 to Charlotte and $15,000 each to Benton Harbor and Mt. Clemens for libraries.

Charles Ehlert, a patient in Emergency hospital, Detroit, has killed himself by jumping from a third-story window.

A Durand church claims the cure of a man named Wheelock from rheumatism after having been unable to walk for months.

Kept Her Eyes Open.

The first appearance on the stage of Mrs. Kendal was at the early age of five years. She played the part of a blind child and frankly confessed that it was not a success. Unwisely she had been given a pair of new shoes for the performance, and so great was the child's delight in these that nothing could induce her to keep her eyes shut, as she should have done, and refrain from taking stray peeps at her beautiful, shiny footgear.

Keeping down expenses and keeping up her faith in her husband are what make a married woman lead a strenuous life.—Atchison Globe.

CHILD KILLED IN RUNAWAY

And Two Others Injured in Detroit on Saturday.

Detroit, March 24.—One of the saddest of runaway accidents which has happened in this city in some time occurred on Saturday afternoon.

Three little girls, Ernestine Gowdy, Margaret Werneken and Florence Bowden, all near the age of 13 and daughters of prominent citizens, were driving a little pony on the Boulevard speedway, when some unknown person drove up from behind at a breakneck speed. The little pony became frightened, and in the runaway that ensued the children were thrown out, each being severely injured. The injuries received by the little Gowdy girl proved fatal, and later she died at Harper hospital.

His Sentence Commuted.

Lansing, Mich., March 24.—Gov. Bliss has commuted the life sentence of Henry Prame, a Grand Rapids convict, in solitary confinement for murder in the first degree, to 20 years' imprisonment. Prame was convicted upon his plea of guilty. According to his confession, he went to Grand Rapids with Charles McCord from Chicago, the purpose of their visit being to rob an old woman, Mary McKendrick, whom McCord knew, and who had money. During the robbery of the house the old woman identified McCord, and the robbers killed her to secure their safety. Prame confessed to the crime in court and he pleaded guilty, afterward giving testimony which resulted in the conviction of McCord.

Big Fire at West Branch.

West Branch, Mich., March 24.—West Branch was visited by another big fire which started in Rollin's restaurant about 12 o'clock Friday night, nearly burning the whole block. Raus' saloon, Mrs. McKay's millinery shop, Cullen's shoe store, Whitman's bowling alley, Rollin's restaurant, the postoffice, opera house, Wm. Marthen's saloon, Morrison's harness shop, Beeches' barn and all the barns and outbuildings in the block. The fire engine, which was brought for such an occasion, was frozen up and the buildings were all destroyed before it could be made to work. Loss $15,000; insurance not known.

Lieut. Hadley Is Dead.

Hillsdale, Mich., March 24.—Lieut. C. B. Hadley, who won promotion by gallant conduct in the civil war, died Saturday at midnight at his home in Litchfield township. He was formerly county treasurer. A few years ago he was awarded a medal of monor by the government for meritorious services in carrying dispatches from Gen. Grant to Gen. Burnside during the siege of Knoxville.

May Die of Toothache.

Royal Oak, Mich., March 24.—Not long since Mrs. W. Fisher had a tooth extracted in Detroit and some alarming symptoms have followed. Her head has swollen in a frightful manner, and although everything has been done for her that medical skill can devise, she can get no relief. Doctors are at a loss to understand the case. The woman's recovery is considered doubtful.

Prominent Professor Dead.

Kalamazoo, Mich., March 24.—Seth J. Axtell, professor of Greek in Kalamazoo college for the past 12 years, died Sunday from grip, aged 60 years. Prof. Axtell, who was a graduate of Brown university, from which he held the degree of M.A., was president of Leland university, at New Orleans, from 1878 to 1882, and president of Central college at Prlla, Iowa, in 1889 and 1890.

Crushed in a Hay Press.

Munith, Mich., March 22.—Joseph Grafnitz had one leg crushed and was otherwise badly injured in a hay press Saturday. His recovery is doubtful.

Killed by the Fall.

Pittsburg, March 24.—The dead body of Dr. Harry Whitesell, a rising young physician of Gewickley, was found yesterday resting on a ledge of rocks along the Ohio river bank near his home. At first it was thought he had been murdered, but investigation by the coroner showed that he was killed by a fall. His family say he was called to see a patient, and it is supposed that in walking along the high bank at that point he slipped and fell to the rocks below.

Killed Eight Gendarmes.

London, March 24.—A dispatch to the Standard from Athens says that in a recent fatal riot at Philates, in Epirus, between Albanians and Turks, the latter endeavored to rescue a notable criminal from the local prison. The disturbances were followed by a fight in which eight gendarmes were killed.

Turks and Bazouks Killed.

London, March 24.—A dispatch to the Morning Leader from Sofia says that 14 Turks and over 30 Bashi-Bazouks were killed in the recent conflict between Turkish troops and Macedonian revolutionists at Sistova, near Kastoria, European Turkey, during which the Turks surrounded the village and overcame the rebels.

The Vice of Nagging

NOW COMES THE OLEO BILL.

Scheduled for Settlement in the Senate This Week.

Washington, March 24.—The oleomargarine bill will receive the greater share of the attention of the senate during the present week, but if there should be a time when no one is prepared to speak on it Senator Proctor, who will have charge of it, will give way to the Chinese exclusion bill, which is in the hands of Senator Penrose. Senator Proctor will call the oleo bill up after the expiration of the morning hour today and will make a statement of the intent and purpose of the bill. It is probable that further consideration then will be postponed for a day. Senator Proctor expresses the opinion that the final vote on the bill will not be long postponed, and it is understood that the members of the committee on agriculture who are opposed to the bill will not content for many days for debate. Senators Penrose, Mitchell and Fairbanks will be among those who will make speeches in support of the Chinese bill. This measure will provoke no little controversy. The Indian appropriation bill probably will be reported from committee during the week, and will receive early attention.

There is a bare possibility that the fight over the question of Cuban reciprocity will be transferred to the floor of the house during the coming week. The probabilities, however, are that the reciprocity resolution introduced by Mr. Payne, the floor leader of the majority, after the action of the republican caucus last week will not be called up until the following week, though upon this point no definite decision has been reached as yet by the leaders. The present program is to take up the army bill after the disposal of the Moss-Rhea contested election case on Tuesday. Several days will be consumed in general debate on this bill, as the democrats are inclined to use it as a text for speeches in opposition to the policy of the administration in the Philippines. It is a foregone conclusion that Mr. Rhea will be unseated when the vote on his contested election case is taken on Tuesday.

THEY ARE WORRIED.

Situation in China Alarms Washington Officials.

Washington, March 24.—The situation in southern China is attracting the anxious interest of the state department officials, who are in no mood to become again involved in that quarter of the world. The last advices to the department from the seat of trouble were from United States Consul McWade at Canton, dated March 18, saying: "Viceroy reports rebellion in Kwangsi almost crushed."

This is not borne out by the press advices of later date, hence the anxiety of the officials.

Hong Kong, March 24.—The rebels have captured the prefectural town of Kam-Chou, in the province of Kwang-Tung, and have seized the arsenal and granaries. The mandarins of the garrison fled and appealed to Canton for reinforcements. The viceroy of Canton replied that it was impossible to further deplete the Canton garrison and urged Gen. Mato to make the utmost efforts to put down the rebellion.

Many Japanese Killed.

Victoria, March 24.—A terrible accident is reported from West Japan, where an avalanche slid down upon a petroleum works beneath a high hill Feb. 18, causing the death of over 100 Japanese. About 80 bodies were taken out and four were rescued alive, but terribly burned. The oil works, warehouses, offices and dwellings were crushed, and in the parts not entirely buried fire started, and all the buildings, with the entombed people, were burned.

Shot Her Husband in Quarrel.

Washington, Ind., March 24.—During a quarrel at the supper table last evening, Liberty Kemp, a well-known business man, attempted to choke his wife. The woman managed to get a revolver and fired five shots at her husband, one bullet penetrating the brain. He died in a few moments. The wife told her story to the police and has not yet been arrested.

Life Guards.

The Life Guards are two regiments of cavalry forming part of the British household troops. They are gallant soldiers, and every loyal British heart is proud of them. Not only the king's household, but yours, ours, everybody's should have it's life guards. The need of them is especially great when the greatest foes of life, diseases, find allies in the very elements, as colds, influenza, catarrh, the grip and pneumonia do in the stormy month of March. The best way that we know of to guard against these diseases is to strengthen the system with Hood's Sarsaparilla—the greatest of all life guards. It removes the conditions in which those diseases make their most successful attack, gives vigor and tone to all the vital organs and functions, and imparts a genial warmth to the blood. Remember the weaker the system the greater the exposure to disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the system strong.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

By local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Halls' Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

summons at once and in another moment was standing at the curb beside the vehicle.

The lady who had summoned him from the club occupied the rear seat of the carriage. Opposite her was another woman. Both were veiled. He rightly guessed that they were mistress and servant and therefore bestowed only one quick glance upon the woman who occupied the front seat. The other he regarded earnestly, for an instant only, while he tried in vain to peer through the meshes of her veil.

It was an artfully constructed affair, evidently arranged with an attempt to conceal the fact that it was intended for a disguise, and yet so cleverly worn that it effectually concealed the features of the wearer. Closely woven and dotted here and there by black spots and doubtless doubled, it was only sufficiently transparent to permit Wyndham to discern two glowing eyes behind it and to guess rather than to see that the face to which they belonged was young and beautiful.

Perhaps there was something in her voice which impressed that idea upon him, for he did not remember ever having heard one just like it before or one that suited him quite so well.

"Are you Mr. Craig Wyndham?" she asked the moment he approached her. He thought—it seemed to him, and yet he was by no means sure—that there was a slight touch of accent in the words, such an accent as a young girl for a long time at school abroad might acquire.

"Yes," he replied, "I am Craig Wyndham. I do not think, however, that I have the honor of your acquaintance," he added bluntly.

"No," she assented. "I am unknown to you, Mr. Wyndham. Will it serve as sufficient introduction for the present if I tell you that I was Mr. Pendleton's friend?"

"His friends—that is, his real friends—may count upon me as a friend, madam," was the diplomatic reply.

"Did he never mention to you one whose given name is Carmen?" she inquired next.

"Never."

"Did he not tell you about the duel in Mexico?" was her next question.

"He mentioned it; that is all. I never heard the particulars."

She was silent for a moment then, but suddenly she extended one hand toward him, and he saw that it contained a card.

"I will not mystify you any longer, Mr. Wyndham," she said. "There is my card. I have written upon it the name of the hotel where I am stopping. Would you like to hear the particulars of the duel to which I have already referred?"

"I should, very much indeed."

"If you will call upon me this evening, there is much that I would like to tell you. The woman who is with me now is my servant. She will be present when you call, but she does not understand a word of English. Will you come?"

"Most certainly I will come. Will you name the hour when you will expect me?"

"At 8. I have a private parlor, where we can converse undisturbed. Now, one more question, Mr. Wyndham."

He bowed, and she continued:

"Do you know of a gentleman who is here from Mexico, by name Escudera?"

"I do."

"I hope, for the present at least, that he may not learn of my presence in the city."

"Nobody will learn that fact from me. I can assure you of that."

He turned to James again.

"Why did Mr. Pendleton make use of an assumed name at all?" he asked.

"He never told me that, sir."

"Do you know?"

"I think so—partly. I do know that it had nothing to do with his marriage, for he chose the name before we left New York, and he never saw her until after we arrived in Mexico. He went there on some business that had been his father's. He believed that he could best attend to it if he were not known. And you must remember one thing, sir—although people in Mexico knew him by a name not his own, his wife, although she never bore his right name openly, must have known what it was, for the letters he received were properly addressed. I believe others were deceived, but that she was not. Now, sir, I have really told you all I know—more, in fact, for I have made bold to conjecture a great deal. Perhaps out of it all you may find the missing links in the broken chain. I am sure I cannot help you any more unless you take me to Mexico and let me point out the house where he lived. That might help you, sir."

CHAPTER VII.

WYNDHAM'S GAME OF DOUBLES.

AFTER that there was a hiatus which lasted several weeks, during which nothing worthy of record here happened. Wyndham and Escudera continued to meet as they had done before, and there were other interviews between James and Wyndham, which, however, developed nothing new.

The letters sent to Mexico by Wyndham were answered, but from them he derived no information that was of benefit to him in his search for the defiant mystery that had shrouded the life of Burr Pendleton.

With the exception that now and then some incident would recall the event to the memory of a reporter, the tragedy of which Pendleton was the victim was almost forgotten.

Even Wyndham himself began to despair of ultimate success, or, rather, he had about made up his mind to go to Mexico himself, where he believed the solution of the affair was located, when an event occurred which altered all his plans and which brought things ultimately to a climax.

He was sitting idly in the clubhouse one afternoon, wearily thinking over all that had occurred and endeavoring to decide what was best for him to do next, when one of the servants informed him that a lady in a carriage at the door wished to speak to him.

He rose wonderingly, for Craig Wyndham was in no sense a ladies' man. He never sought their society and, in fact, avoided them when he could. That one should drive to the clubhouse door and ask for him was so utterly unprecedented that he was for the moment nonplused. However, he obeyed the

"How abrupt and how direct you are, Mr. Wyndham! Too much of both in coping with such a man as Escudera, if you will pardon me for saying it. But I did not mean my remark as you understood it."

"Will you tell me what you did mean?"

"I will risk offending you and reply. I mean that I doubt very much if you go anywhere without the knowledge of that man, and therefore I hope that you will see to it tonight that you are not followed and therefore unconsciously betray me."

For the first time since the interview began Wyndham smiled.

"Thank you," he said. "I confess I had not thought of that possibility, but I think I may assure you that Senor Escudera will not know where I call this evening."

"Do you speak Spanish, Mr. Wyndham?" she asked quite irrelevantly.

"Yes," he replied, still in English; "I speak several languages."

"Then if you will tell my coachman to return to the hotel I will be obliged. I gave him other orders when we started. He does not understand English."

"Does he understand the city sufficiently well to drive you about?"

"Quite so, thank you."

Wyndham raised his hat and closed the carriage door; then, having given the necessary directions to the driver and standing motionless while the vehicle rolled away, he turned and reentered the club. As he mounted the steps he happened to raise his eyes and, peering at him from one of the windows, was the smiling and handsome face of Carlos Escudera, who nodded at him genially.

Wyndham could barely repress a start of apprehension lest the Mexican had seen and recognized the lady or one of her servants. It was impossible to determine whether he had or not, but he recalled with sudden emphasis the word of warning that Carmen del Puente had given him.

He walked through to the back parlor of the club and, having seated himself beside the grate, dropped the card that he still held in his hand upon the coals and watched it until it had burned to ashes. Then with the poker he destroyed the ashes, punching them down among the glowing embers. As he straightened up in his chair he heard the soft voice of Carlos Escudera behind him.

"Have pity on a poor fellow, Wyndham," he said, "and give me the benefit of your society a little while. In my language there is no word which expresses my feelings, but in yours there is one which fits it exactly. It is homesickness. Did you ever experience it?"

"Often. Take a seat, Don Carlos. Have you an engagement for this evening?"

"No; nothing."

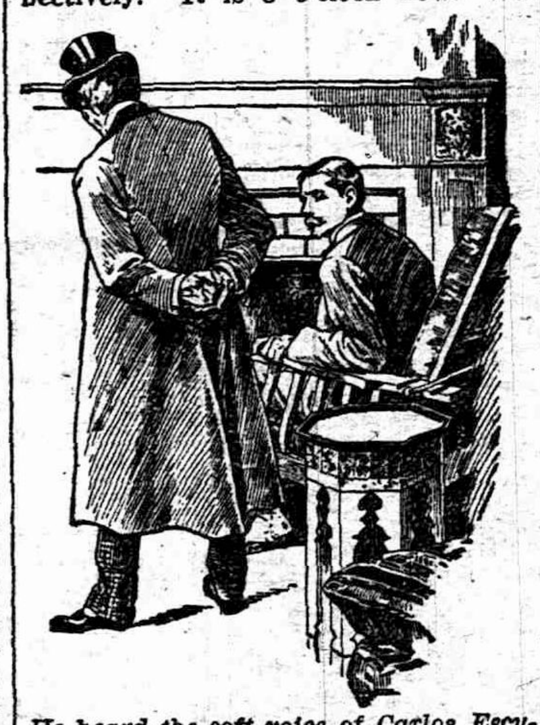
"Then I have an idea—one that will cheer you up, I hope. I will ask two or three others to join us at my rooms, and we will have a game of cards."

"That is kind of you, Wyndham."

"I'm not so sure of that. You may find the evening an expensive luxury."

"I'll take my chances of that," replied Escudera, with a grim smile. He was notoriously expert with cards and seldom lost.

"Suppose we make the affair an innovation?" continued Wyndham reflectively. "It is 3 o'clock now. We will begin the game at 6 precisely and play till 6 in the morning. I can make up a party to do that, I'm sure. I'll have my man serve us something good to eat at midnight. How does that strike you?"



He heard the soft voice of Carlos Escudera behind him.

"As a good idea."

"Very well. Meet me at my rooms at 5. In the meantime I will have made up the party and have everybody on hand at that time."

This was agreed to, and the two men parted. Escudera left the club at once, but Wyndham loitered until he had gone and then looked up Biggs, who was in the library.

"Carleto," he said, "I want you to do me a very great favor. May I depend upon you?"

"Certainly, Craig. What is it?"

"I have got a party on hand at my rooms for tonight, and I want you to be one of us."

"It strikes me that the obligation is on the other side, old man."

"Wait. You have not heard me through. The party is to convene at 5. At 6 we are to begin a game of poker, which is to last until 6 in the morning. I"—

"I didn't know that you went in for that sort of thing, Craig. And you know"—

"Wait; wait! I know, of course, that you cannot afford such things, and you do right in keeping out of them, but this is an extreme case. I have another engagement for tonight, one that is very important, one that I must keep and which I desire to remain a mystery. Do you understand—an engagement that I do not want anybody to know about, an important business engagement; understand?"

"I begin to—yes."

"Well, this is what I want you to do. You will understand how thoroughly I trust you. At half past 7 precisely I want you to drive to my door in a four wheeler that you will have engaged at Madison square or anywhere, so that it is not here at the club. Pay the driver in advance. Tell him to hurry to my door, and tell him when a gentleman comes out and gets into his vehicle he is to start off at once without a word and drive as fast as his horses can go to the corner of Thirty-third street and turn the corner toward Sixth avenue. There, after he has turned the corner, he will pull up until he hears the door of his carriage slam shut, when, without looking around, he will drive on and return to his stand, wherever that may be. You will give him $5 for his trouble. He will be glad to do it, but be particular to have him do it just as I have said. My own carriage will be awaiting me, and if anybody tries to follow me that person will have a good time of it. What do you think?"

"Excellent."

"Now for the remainder of your instructions. Rush into my room in the greatest haste, all out of breath and all that. We will be at the game. Say something apologetic for interrupting us and then whisper something—anything—in my ear. I will look amazed and a trifle annoyed. I will say aloud, 'At the Waldorf?' You will reply: 'Yes, and they are going away in an hour. I knew that you wanted particularly to see them, and I have looked everywhere for you. At last it struck me that you might be here. My cab is at the door. Take that, and you will get there in time.' That ends your part of the scheme. I will ask the others to excuse me—important business, won't keep me an hour, and all that, you know, and ask you to take my hand and play for me till I return. You consent, and I'll do the rest. Will you do it all, Carleton? I'll never forget it."

"You can count on me to the letter, Craig."

"I knew I could. Here is some money. I don't know how much, but never mind; don't let anybody see you take it. Remember, half past 7."

"I'll be there. Will you be long away?"

"I cannot tell—an hour or two or three at the most. Play my hand freely. I won't mind if you lose considerably to keep them interested. You understand?"

"Yes."

"Biggs, you're a trump. I cannot tell you how you have relieved me."

After that Wyndham wrote several notes, which he sent out by messenger boys, with instructions to bring replies. They were all in by half past 4 and were evidently satisfactory, for Craig Wyndham did not look in the least worried when he left the club and repaired to his own apartments, which, by the way, were the same that had formerly been occupied by Burr Pendleton. The servant who waited upon him there also looked strangely like James. However, he answered to the name of Thomas, only that the smooth face was covered by a heavy growth of beard dyed black and a perfectly made wig of the same hue. Add to that the fact that he rarely appeared when his master had company, and you have grasped the situation.

He was not, however, the person to whom Wyndham had referred in his talk with Escudera as "my man," so there was no danger that James would be seen by those who might recognize him.

At 5 precisely Don Carlos arrived, and by half past 5 the expected guests were all there. There was a luncheon prepared for them, but all claimed that in anticipation of the midnight dinner they had already "stayed their stomachs," so that it went untasted.

At 6 the game began, and it proceeded merrily without interruption for an hour and a half, when the doorbell rang, and an instant later Carleton Biggs rushed in.

He played his part beautifully. There was not a hitch anywhere. Within ten minutes after he entered the room Craig Wyndham left it, rushed down the one flight of stairs to the street, leaped into the carriage and was driven away. And back in the parlor of his apartment the game went on almost without interruption.

If Escudera felt annoyance at this sudden departure of the host, he gave no sign of it. If there were, as Wyndham now suspected, others in his employ on the watch to dog the footsteps of the American, they succeeded only in following an empty carriage to its stand along the western side of Madison square. As for Craig, he changed to the second vehicle without trouble and at 8 o'clock was in the presence of Senorita del Puente and her duenna, but it was in a hotel much farther up town than the Waldorf, and if there had been watchers on his track they would wait a long time before they would be likely to discover him at that famous hostelry.

HOME AND CHILD

Does your horse "feel his oats"? What a difference between the grain-fed and the grass-fed horse! The first strong and full of ginger, the second flabby, weak and tired out before he begins. The feeding makes the difference.

Children are not alike either. One is rosy, bright-eyed, full of life and laughter, another is pale, weak and dull. The feeding again is responsible.

Sickly children need special feeding. They don't "feel their oats". Scott's Emulsion adds just the right richness to their diet. It is like grain to the horse. The child gets new appetite and strong digestion.

Scott's Emulsion is more than food. It is a strong medicine. It rouses up dull children, puts new flesh on thin ones and red blood into pale ones. It makes children grow. Scott's Emulsion makes ordinary food do its duty.

This picture represents the Trade Mark of Scott's Emulsion and is on the wrapper of every bottle.

Sec.—Mrs. Cleo Hall.
Treas.—Miss Loana Stacy.

The last meeting of the Monday club for this year will occur March 31st and will be a Reciprocity Day on which all the other clubs are invited to take part in the program. The meeting will be held at the Universalist church and the program will begin at 7:30.

THE SCHOOLS.

Hazel Clark visited the ninth grade Monday.

Floyd Bryan and Ethel Leonard were absent Monday.

Wilford Waldron was absent from Miss Hall's room Monday.

Mrs. A. Boyce, of Detroit, visited the A room Monday afternoon.

Mable Church and Nina Macham were among the absent ones from Miss Thomas' room Monday.

Henry Calhoun, a graduate of Tecumseh high school and his sister, Miss Ruth, visited the A room Monday. Mr. Calhoun teaches school in DeKalb, Ind.

Miss Ethel Slayton tried in vain a few days ago to make Prof. Kellogg believe the first Monday in April came on the last day of March but Prof. Kellogg is not so slow.

One coming past the office during the third and fourth hours in the forenoon would be led to think Prof. Kellogg had taken the place of Miss McKenna as music teacher, by the professors and the physics class will no doubt find the long sought for "Lost Chord."

The following card was presented to a young lady of the high school recently, "Mr. Will Lambkin, eye specialist." An appreciative audience watched a trial lesson given in the ninth grade room Monday. Nothing but goo-goo eyes were indulged in, but nevertheless they were "Lulus."

A net to catch a woman—Bonnet.

ROUND ABOUT US.

A country woman who undertook to color some goods with maple bark claims that she has discovered this is a good world to live in, but a hard one to dye in.—Exchange.

The supervisors in session at Adrian last Friday decided to build an annex to the county jail at a cost of $1,425. When completed it will be known as the "Detention Home"

A crib bed, ordered by the supervisors has been received in Adrian. The crib has wire springs in the bottom, and crate sides and top, so that a violent subject placed therein, is unable to do himself, or any other person, an injury.—Hudson Post.

Miss Mae Ladd went to Tecumseh on Wednesday to attend the wedding of Thomas Jones and Miss Edith Watters of that place. Miss Watters is a former resident of Brooklyn and her friends here all join in wishing her a long and happy married life.—Brooklyn Exponent.

Wm. Savage, the overcoat theif, was brought into court Wednesday morning and after charging his plea to guilty was given five years at Jackson prison. He has served twenty-one years in prison and is 59 years old. He is wanted in several places on similar thefts and will probably spend the rest of his days behind the bars.—Clinton Local.

Nathan J. Bovian, of this city, enjoys the distinction of being the youngest soldier, with one possible exception, who served during the war of the rebellion. He enlisted in the 58th Pennsylvania infantry in October, 1871, at the age of eleven years, and on the expiration of his term of enlistment he immediately re-enlisted as a veteran and served continuously until the war was ended in 1865.—Hillsdale Democrat.

A Jasper seamstress, Miss Theda Drake, advertises to do plain or fancy sewing at 50 cents per day. Miss Drake is advised that she is not charging prosperity prices for her works. With potatoes at 75c a bushel, apples three cents apiece and butter 25c a pound, 50 cents per day will not go far toward supporting a family. Still eggs are only 10c a dozen now and she may not have any family to support.

Meyers & Deville have accepted the proposition of the business men of Dansville, Virginia, to locate their furniture manufacturing industry there and will move their machinery to that city in about two months. Mr. Meyers will start for Virginia in about two weeks to select a location for the plant. The effort to form a stock company to keep the factory in Hudson failed.—Hudson Gazette.

The Detroit Tribune of Saturday said that Ex-Postmaster Smith, of Adrian, was supporting the Horton boom for the gubernatorial nomination. Mr. Smith didn't like this sort of notoriety and immediately wired Gov. Bliss that there was nothing in it and that the report that he was backing Mr. Horton was without the least foundation. The governor accepted the "amendment" and now Mr. Smith is happy again.—Hudson Gazette.

J. S. Giman of Tecumseh, celebrated his 92nd birthday Tuesday, and is in excellent health. He has taken the Tecumseh HERALD 50 years and we are at a loss to decide whether Stacy ought to be prosecuted for getting money under false pretences, or whether Gilman ought not to give the HERALD force a banquet, in recognition of its good work in prolonging his life. We rather favor a banquet, with an invitation that will afford us an opportunity to fill up once.—Adrian Press.

A minister of the gospel once saw a crowd of boys sitting in front of a ring with a small dog in the center. Walking up to the crowd he inquired: "What are you going to do with that dog, boys?" After a short silence one of them replied; "We are going to give him to the one who can tell the biggest lie." The preacher replied: "I am surprised at you, boys, for when I was a boy I never told a lie." After another short pause one little fellow shouted! "Give him the dog, boys!"—Reese Review.

Niles, Mich, March 18—A movement has been started here by Miss Fannie Lacey, a prominent Niles society woman to organize the widows and unmarried women of the state for the purpose of applying to the state legislature for exemption of personal tax on property, not to exceed $5,000. A meeting will be held next Wednesday to organize. It is denied that the franchise is sought. The women declare that inas much as they have no representation they must band together and apply to the legislature to grant them the exemption from the personal tax. They expect to form a powerful state organization.—Hudson Gazette.

We had the pleasure of examining a few articles that were both curious and interesting, a few days ago, brought to this office by Mrs. N. Norton Clark. These articles were sent to her by her son, N. V. Clark, who is in Ashville, N. C. One was a laurel leaf about six inches in length and one inch wide, green and fresh, another, a very nice wristlet made from sheep's wool and rabbits fur mixed, home carded home spun and home knit; the third, a brace of rattlesnake rattles containing fourteen rattles. We believe from appearances that this snake was a monster and formerly roved about in the southern mountains, but no more to be dreaded than varieties found in more northern latitudes.—Deerfield Times Journal

Peculiar To Itself

In what it is and what it does—containing the best blood-purifying, alterative and tonic substances and effecting the most radical and permanent cures of all humors and all eruptions, relieving weak, tired, languid feelings, and building up the whole system—is true only of

Hood's Sarsaparilla

No other medicine acts like it; no other medicine has done so much real, substantial good, no other medicine has restored health and strength at so little cost.

"I was troubled with scrofula and came near losing my eyesight. For four months I could not see to do anything. After taking two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla I could see to walk, and when I had taken eight bottles I could see as well as ever." SUSIE A. HAIRSTON, Withers, N. C.

Would Smash the Club.

If members of the "Hay Fever Association" would take Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, the club would go to pieces, for it always cures this malady, and asthma, the kind that baffles the doctors, it wholly drives from the system. Thousands of once hopeless sufferers from consumption, pneumonia, bronchitis owe their lives and health to it. It conquers grip, saves little ones from croup and whooping cough and is positively guaranteed for all throat and lung troubles, 50c, $1.00 Trial bottle free at C. A. Wright's.

Take Notice.

We, the butchers of Tecumseh, have hereby agreed not to deliver any meat on Sunday what ever, after March 30th and also our market will be closed at 10 o'clock a. m. sharp, sun time Sunday for the rest of the day.

A Printer Greatly Surprised

"I never was so much surprised in my life, as I was with the results of using Chamberlain's Pain Balm," says Henry T. Crook, pressman of the Asheville, N. C. Gazette. "I contracted a severe case of rheumatism early last winter by getting my feet wet. I tried several things for it without benefit. One day while looking over the Gazette, I noticed that Pain Balm was positively guaranteed to cure rheumatism, so bought a bottle of it and before using two thirds of it my rheumatism had taken its flight and I have not had a rheumatic pain since." TRAIN STRUCK ELECTRIC CAR.

Three Persons Injured in Collision at Muskegon.

Muskegon, Mich., March 22.—Three persons were badly cut and bruised, one of them seriously, in a collision at 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon between a Pere Marquette coal train and an electric car at the Bluffton crossing.

The injured: Conductor H. Woodhouse, arms and hips cut, internally injured, may die; Freight Conductor Charles Knapp, face and head cut, not serious; Motorman G. Crotty, face cut, severe bruises on body.

The coal train was running at a high rate of speed to make the steep grade, and the electric car was struck when half way across the tracks. The electric car was smashed to splinters and was thrown from the rails, a distance of 50 feet. The coal cars were piled into a heap, one on top of another. The responsibility for the accident has not been located. Luckily there were no passengers on the street car.

The Great Northern Portland Cement Co. of Baldwin is suing that township to recover $2,500 taxes paid under protest. The company is assessed at $80,000, fixed by the state tax commission, and claims that its property is the only piece in the county that is assessed at its full value.

Roy Layden, aged 13, and employed at the Goldie Hoop Co.'s mill at West Bay City, jumped on to a moving freight car on his way home at noon Thursday. Having a run on Chamberlain's Cough Remedy

Between the hours of eleven o'clock a. m. and closing time at night on Jan. 25th, 1901, A. F. Clark, druggist, Glade Springs, Va. sold twelve bottles of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He says: "I never handled a medicine that sold better or gave better satisfaction to my customers." This remedy has been in general use in Virginia for many years, and the people there are well acquainted with its excellent qualities. Many of them have testified to the remarkable cures which it has effected. When you need a good, reliable medicine for a cold or cough, or attack of the grip, use Ceamberlain's Cough Remedy and you are certain to be more than pleased with the quick cure which it affords. For sale by J. J. Orr.

A Little Slow.

"One day," says an exchange clerk in a Philadelphia department store, "an old fellow from the country came up to my desk and, laying down a package, said:

"'Young man, here's a suit of underwear that I bought here seven years ago. It is too small for me, and I would like to have it exchanged.'

"I was thunderstruck at the nerve of the man, but I managed to say something about the time limit on such transactions.

"'Well,' said he, 'I know that, but I've never had 'em on, and this is the first time I've been in town since the day I bought 'em.'"

"I had a most stubborn cough for many years. It deprived me of sleep and I grew very thin. I then tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was quickly cured."

We know it's the greatest cough remedy ever made. And you will say so, too, after you try it. There's cure in every drop.

Washington, March 22.—Senators McMillan and Burrows and the entire Michigan house delegation, except Fordney and Corliss, who are out of town, had a conference yesterday noon on the Cuban tariff reduction bill. Both senators talked vigorously against the proposed reduction and its effect on the fall elections. Beetles' Music.

While the structure of the music of stridulating organs of beetles is extremely simple they sometimes possess contrivances for varying the pitch. The general structure of such an organ is a hard surface covered with striations, over which some other member of the body furnished with a rasping edge or area is rubbed. When the striated edge is divided into parts with finer and coarser markings, variations of pitch can be produced.

Gowns and Their Wearers.

It's a common error.

To plaster the aching back.

To rub with liniment rheumatic joints

When the trouble comes from the kidneys.

Doan's Kidney Pills cure all kidney ills.

And are endorsed by Tecumseh citizens.

Vet. O. Austen, who lives with his son in the northeast section of Tecumseh, says: "I am more than thankful that Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my notice for they did me a great deal of good, in fact they stopped a dull aching pain in my back which had annoyed me for years, and also rendered the action of the kidney secretions normal which at times were too frequent and highly colored. I tried a number of so called kidney cures but I did not receive any benefit before I learned about Doan's Kidney Pills and I knew people who had used them so I went to C. A. Wright's drug store and got them. To say I entertain a very favorable opinion of them as a kidney medicine is putting it in mild terms. They are all and more than they are represented to be."

For sale by all dealers: Price 50 cents per box, Foster-Milburn company, Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States. Remember the name Doan's and take no substitute.

Won the Crowd.

Charley Burley, the abolitionist, in the midst of an antislavery speech was struck by a decayed egg full in the face. Pausing to wipe away the contents of the missile, he said calmly, "I have always contended that proslavery arguments were very unsound." The crowd roared, and he was no longer molested.

Dangers of Pneumonia.

A cold at this time if neglected is liable to cause pneumonia which is so often fatal, and even when the patient has recovered the lungs are weakened, making them peculiarly susceptible to the development of consumption. Foley's Honey and Tar will stop the cough, heal and strengthen the lungs and prevent pneumonia. John J. Orr.

Browning's Care For Health.

Browning never passed a day without taking one or more long walks. Indeed, his panacea for most ills was exercise, and the exercise he chiefly advocated was walking. He wrote:

"I get as nearly angry as it is in me to become with people I love when they trifle with their health—that is, with their life—like children playing with jewels over a bridge side, jewels which once in the water how can we, the poor lookers on, hope to recover? You don't know how absolutely well I am after my walking, not on the mountains merely, but on the beloved Lido. Go there, if only to stand and be blown about by the sea wind."—Century Magazine.

NOW COMES THE OLEO BILL.

Scheduled for Settlement in the Senate This Week.

Washington, March 24.—The oleomargarine bill will receive the greater share of the attention of the senate during the present week, but if there should be a time when no one is prepared to speak on it Senator Proctor, who will have charge of it, will give way to the Chinese exclusion bill, which is in the hands of Senator Penrose. Senator Proctor will call the oleo bill up after the expiration of the morning hour today and will make a statement of the intent and purpose of the bill. It is probable that further consideration then will be postponed for a day. Senator Proctor expresses the opinion that the final vote on the bill will not be long postponed, and it is understood that the members of the committee on agriculture who are opposed to the bill will not content for many days for debate. Senators Penrose, Mitchell and Fairbanks will be among those who will make speeches in support of the Chinese bill. This measure will provoke no little controversy. The Indian appropriation bill probably will be reported from committee during the week, and will receive early attention.

There is a bare possibility that the fight over the question of Cuban reciprocity will be transferred to the floor of the house during the coming week. The probabilities, however, are that the reciprocity resolution introduced by Mr. Payne, the floor leader of the majority, after the action of the republican caucus last week will not be called up until the following week, though upon this point no definite decision has been reached as yet by the leaders. The present program is to take up the army bill after the disposal of the Moss-Rhea contested election case on Tuesday. Several days will be consumed in general debate on this bill, as the democrats are inclined to use it as a text for speeches in opposition to the policy of the administration in the Philippines. It is a foregone conclusion that Mr. Rhea will be unseated when the vote on his contested election case is taken on Tuesday.

THEY ARE WORRIED.

Situation in China Alarms Washington Officials.

Washington, March 24.—The situation in southern China is attracting the anxious interest of the state department officials, who are in no mood to become again involved in that quarter of the world. The last advices to the department from the seat of trouble were from United States Consul McWade at Canton, dated March 18, saying: "Viceroy reports rebellion in Kwangsi almost crushed."

This is not borne out by the press advices of later date, hence the anxiety of the officials.

Hong Kong, March 24.—The rebels have captured the prefectural town of Kam-Chou, in the province of Kwang-Tung, and have seized the arsenal and granaries. The mandarins of the garrison fled and appealed to Canton for reinforcements. The viceroy of Canton replied that it was impossible to further deplete the Canton garrison and urged Gen. Mato to make the utmost efforts to put down the rebellion.

Many Japanese Killed.

Victoria, March 24.—A terrible accident is reported from West Japan, where an avalanche slid down upon a petroleum works beneath a high hill Feb. 18, causing the death of over 100 Japanese. About 80 bodies were taken out and four were rescued alive, but terribly burned. The oil works, warehouses, offices and dwellings were crushed, and in the parts not entirely buried fire started, and all the buildings, with the entombed people, were burned.

Question Answered.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Get Green's Prize Almanac at J. J. Orr's.

Failed to Catch the Tune.

A professor in an old Pennsylvania college was conducting a review in Latin. Of a sleepy looking youth he asked the question, "What construction is that at the top of page twelve?"

"I don't know," was the prompt reply.

"Why not?" thundered the professor. "I have been harping on that construction all term."

"I know you have, professor," was the soft reply, "but I haven't caught the tune yet."

RHODES IS DEAD

Passed Away at His Home in Cape Town.

HEART DISEASE THE CAUSE

Leaves His Immense Enterprises in a Systematic Condition—Climbed the Ladder of Fame From a Lowly Position in Life.

Cape Town, March 27.—Cecil Rhodes passed away near the hour of 6 last evening. The immediate cause of his death was two successive attacks of heart failure.

Rhodes has been a victim of enlargement of the heart for many months. Some weeks ago the disease began to make rapid strides. About three weeks ago he was compelled to take to his bed. Severe and frequent attacks gradually weakened his robust constitution, and it became apparent a few days ago that recovery was impossible despite repeated rallies and the most skillful medical treatment.

At his bedside were Dr. Jameson, Dr. J. W. Smartt, the commissioner of public works, Col. Elmhurst Rhodes, director of signalling of the South African field force; Mr. Walton, a member of the assembly of Port Elizabeth; his boys and personal servants.

The body was taken to Grooteschuur, the residence of the deceased, near Cape Town, on a special train today. There it will probably lie in state for a day or two and the public will be admitted to view the remains. It has not yet been determined where he will be buried. It was the wish of Mr. Rhodes to be interred at Matoppo hills, Rhodesia.

London, March 27.—The death of Cecil Rhodes came as no great surprise to those few who saw anything of him during his last visit to London during the winter.

Been Declining for Two Years.

Whether it was due to his experiences during the long siege of Kimberley, or the accumulated anxieties regarding the war in South Africa, with an accompanying change of public feeling in England towards him, there is no doubt he was almost completely broken down within the last two years.

Even his appearance changed. His once finely chiseled face had become bloated and his always huge frame filled out until he became so stout as to make walking a matter of difficulty. He was frequently attacked with severe heart troubles, during which he exhibited the stoicism which marked his extraordinary career. Nor did he allow his bodily ailments to interfere with business.

Towards the social side of life he soured visibly. Once his day's work at the offices of the British Chartered South Africa Co. was over, he shut himself up from the curious in an unfrequented London hotel, where he utterly denied himself to all except half a dozen favored intimates.

Dr. Jameson was his constant companion. Indeed, none of Dr. Jameson's indiscretions ever affected the warm friendship existing between the two men.

Financially, Mr. Rhodes's death is not likely to have any very far-reaching results, as all his enterprises were systematized so thoroughly as not to need the master mind which was so necessary to their inception.

Owing to the very great success of the De Beers mines, the British Chartered South Africa Co. and the other great South African ventures, Rhodes's fortune had been steadily accumulating. He lost money over the war, but what inroads that made must have been trifling compared with the many millions he possessed.

He never lost his open-handed but somewhat reckless methods of handling money.

Was Once a Castaway.

In his boyhood days Cecil Rhodes was a castaway. Adrift on the wide world, he settled for a time in Australia, where he laid the foundation for his great fortune and subsequent career. When he went to South Africa that vast region was only known as a place on the map.

Since Rhodes landed at Cape Town, Cape Colony, the Orange Free State, the South African Republican, Natal and Rhodesia have become household words. The barren wastes which these words then described under the magic of his genius have blossomed into flourishing states.

Captured 12,000 Seal.

St. Johns, N. F., March 27.—The steamer Leopard has arrived here from the seal fishery, loaded with 12,000 seals. She brings a much better report than the steamer Newfoundland brought on Monday. The Leopard reports that the Neptune has on board 15,000 seals, the Aurora 14,000 and the Diana 12,000, and that the Terranova, Greenland, Iceland, Vanguard, Nimrod and Virginia are loading. The reports of the Leopard account for about 120,000 seals so far. The inhabitants of this city are in a distinctly more hopeful frame of mind than was previously the case.

Revolver That Shot McKinley.

Buffalo, March 27.—The revolver from which was fired the bullet that killed President McKinley, the handkerchief with which the assassin covered the hand which held the revolver as he thrust it toward the president, and the cartridges in the revolver have all been turned over to the Buffalo Historical society and will be placed in the museum of the society.

Can't keep It Secret.

The splendid work of Dr. King's New Life Pills is daily coming to light. No such grand remedy for liver and bowel troubles was ever known before. Thousands bless them for curing constipation sick headache, biliousness, jaundice and indigestion. Try them. 25c at C. A Wright's drug store.

A notorious eaves-dropper—Rain.

Many are fond of Tapioca, but dislike the trouble of soaking it. Use Mrs. Austin's Quick Lunch Tapioca. No soaking.

WHAT ABOUT YOUR BOWELS?

If the people only attended to the regular movement of their bowels as closely as they do to their business and social affairs, half the ills of life would be avoided. Constipation and torpid liver are the forerunners of serious disease and should be cured at once with Liver-Lax, the little 25 cent liver pill. Guaranteed by

PREFERRED DEATH

Ann Arbor Man Could Not Stand Poverty.

HE TOOK CARBOLIC ACID

Was Found Dead in His Room—Last Seen on Tuesday—Left a Note to a Friend, Telling Him of His Misery.

Ann Arbor, Mich., March 27.—Edward Warren, famed in years gone by as a gambler and faro dealer, and one of the best known horsemen in this part of the country, was found dead in his little bachelor room, over Kenny & Quinlan's plumbing shop on Detroit street, at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, self-murdered by carbolic acid. He was 75 years old, and his dying supplication was to be saved from a pauper's fate on the dissecting table.

Tuesday he disappeared, after saying he was going out to the country for a few days, but yesterday it was discovered that his door was locked, the key turned on the inside. Officer Fred Gillen broke in. The old man lay dead on his bed, and an emptied bottle bearing the words "carbolic acid" was on the washstand.

An open note and a sealed letter to Attorney John F. Lawrence were found in the room. In the note Warren mentioned his hard, poverty-stricken life, and alluded to his physical trouble, a bladder disease which caused him great agony. The letter to Attorney Lawrence runs:

"My Dear Friend John—I cannot endure my troubles any longer. I wish to thank you for the many favors you have shown me. I think you wouldn't blame me if you could know what my suffering has been. I hope you may feel like not letting them put me in the pickling vat. Good-bye, John, may God bless you and yours."

Mr. Lawrence, a well-known lawyer of this city, had practically supported the old man for several years.

Among horsemen and other sportsmen of southern Michigan Warren was highly respected. Always fair and square, he lived well when he had money, and at one time was quite wealthy. His life had been full of adventure. In '59 he went to California and made money. He acquired a rich estate in Sonora, Mex., but was driven out by banditti, and kept away from his rights. Through Attorney Lawrence he brought a $100,000 suit against the Mexican government in the United States courts and eventually got $1,000.

A Host of Teachers Expected.

Ann Arbor, Mich., March 27.—The citizens of Ann Arbor are preparing for an unprecedented rush of teachers to this city today, the occasion being the opening of the thirty-seventh annual meeting of the Michigan School Masters' club. Coincident with this meeting will occur sessions of the Classical Conference, the Michigan Academy of Science, the Michigan section of the American Chemical society and the State Commercial and Shorthand Teachers' association. The general spring vacation allows the members of the various organizations an opportunity to attend the sessions. The principal items on the program for today are two lectures to be given in the evening. Prof. Jennings of the U. of M. will speak on "Evidences of evolution and variation in nature," and Maj. Walter Reed, U. S. A., on "Yellow fever." The opening paper before the academy of science will be by Prof. C. A. Davis of the U. of M., and will be on the subject of forestry. In the evening the organization will meet with the schoolmasters.

Nichols Loses His Case.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 27.—The supreme court Wednesday sustained the ruling of the superior court, holding George E. Nichols amenable for contempt in trying to corrupt a witness in the trial for boodling of Lant K. Salsbury, for whom he was attorney. Nichols can be punished for contempt and in addition can be tried for subornation of perjury in a criminal court. Nichols probably will be arrested this week on a criminal warrant.

Lots of Smallpox Still.

Lansing, Mich., March 27.—Reports to the state board of health from representative physicians in active practice in various parts of the state indicate that rheumatism, bronchitis, influenza, neuralgia and tonsilitis, in the order named, caused most sickness in Michigan during the past week. Meningitis was reported at 5 places, whooping cough at 18, diphtheria at 25, typhoid fever at 46, measles at 76, scarlet fever at 102, smallpox at 158 and consumption at 211.

A SPLENDID FUTURE

Gen. Palma Anticipates It for Cuba.

TAKES HIS SEAT MAY 20.

Appropriate Ceremonies Will Be Performed and Representatives Exchanged With United States—A Few U. S. Soldiers Will Be Retained.

Washington, March 26.—President-elect Thomas Estrada Palma of Cuba, having finished his conferences with President Roosevelt, Secretary Root and other officials on matters concerning the transfer of the island from American to Cuban control, left the city at midnight Tuesday for his New York home, where he will remain until the last of April, when he will leave New York for Santiago province, where he will spend a few days, going thence to Havana to be inaugurated May 20. There was an air of contentment about Gen. Palma as he discussed the disposition of the various questions which brought him here. He said he realized the magnitude of the work on which he was about to enter and its attendant responsibilities, but was confident that the future of Cuba was assured and the islands would have a successful career.

"I will enter upon my duties as president of Cuba," said Gen. Palma, "confident in the belief that there is a splendid future in store for the island. The people are naturally of an orderly, peaceable disposition, mild mannered and submissive to law and to order. What they need is the opportunity to work, and with this assured, prosperity will come to the people.

"The condition of affairs is very different now from what it was under the Spanish regime, when the people were under the rule and subject to the will of a captain-general and the military authorities.

"The ceremonies incident to my inauguration will be in keeping with the requirements of the occasion. One of these will be the lowering of the American colors in Havana and the raising of the Cuban flag—an act which will mark the termination of American occupation and the formal assumption of the government by the Cubans. These ceremonies will take place in the palace. Closely following the induction of the new government will be the appointment of a minister to represent it at Washington. As soon as this has been done and a representative appointed from the United States to Cuba, steps will be taken for the drafting of a treaty between the two governments.

"The orders given to Gen. Wood contemplate the retention of about 800 artillerymen at various coast points for a time?" was suggested to Gen. Palma.

"Those men are to be kept at the batteries with the consent of the Cuban government," responded Gen. Palma. "They are not to interfere in any way with Cuban affairs. They will be retained until the Cuban government is ready to replace them with a force of its own men. The latter now has about 300 men who have been drilled in artillery practice, and to these it is contemplated adding about 100 more."

Gen. Palma, in closing, paid this tribute to the United States government:

"The government of the United States has shown a most beautiful example of good faith in dealing with a weak government which it undertook to rescue from its oppressors. It has demonstrated its generosity and patriotism and by the shedding of its own blood has helped Cuba break the chain which united it with Spain. Some countries would have sought some pretext for selfish gain in undertaking a work of this character and taken advantage of some technicality for their own aggrandizement, but the contrary spirit has been manifested by the United States, and it has given to the world an evidence of good will seldom found."

Another Negro Lynched.

Washington, N. C., March 26.—The body of James Walker, the negro who poisoned the whole family of Dr. David T. Tayloe, of the state board of medical examiners, was found dangling from a limb of a gum tree on the Greenville road, just outside of the town limits of Washington, N. C., early Tuesday morning. A man coming to town ran into the body, which hung out over the walking path. He hastened to inform the authorities. Coroner Tayloe was summoned and he empaneled a jury, who brought in a verdict that the negro came to his death by lynching at the hands of unknown parties. The negro was about 19 years old.

Two Children Cremated.

Uniontown, Pa., March 26.—The home of Edward Lyttle near here was destroyed by fire Tuesday morning and two children, aged 2 and 3 years, were cremated. The fire occurred during the absence of Mrs. Lyttle, who had gone to a neighbor's to borrow a kettle. When she returned the house was in ashes. The charred remains of the children were found in the ruins.

HOT AT NEWSPAPERS.

Gen. Funston Says They Misinterpreted His Remarks.

Topeka, Kas., March 27.—Gen. Frederick Funston was in this city Wednesday on his way to California. Gen. Funston delivered himself of a scathing denunciation of the eastern newspapers which criticized his speech before the Lotus club in New York. He said:

"I have been nagged by that class of papers until I am tired. Editorially, they wilfully misinterpret my remarks, and I am glad to express my independence of their opinions and their talk, and that of their kind, about my using dishonorable and unfair means in the capture of Aguinaldo; also that I violated the articles of war. They know a great deal more about the articles of golf than they do about the articles of war. Everything is permissible in a campaign except the use of poison or the violation of a flag of truce.

"As a matter of fact, only four of my men on the expedition were dressed in the insurgent uniform. The others were dressed as Filipino peasants.

"President Roosevelt approved heartily of my remarks before the Lotus club banquet and was very anxious to have me go to Boston, on the invitation of Senator Lodge, and make the same speech there, but my orders were such that it was impossible for me to go."

PATRICK FOUND GUILTY.

Sensational Murder Trial in New York Finally Ends.

New York, March 27.—Albert T. Patrick, lawyer, was last evening convicted of the murder on Sept. 23, 1900, of the aged millionaire recluse, Wm. Marsh Rice.

A scant three hours' of deliberation at the close of a trial prolonged for nine weeks and replete with sensational interest sufficed to enable the jury to reach their verdict. The issue of the trial established the charge that Patrick conspired with Mr. Rice's valet, Charles F. Jones, to obtain possession of the aged man's Texas estate, estimated at $7,000,000, and that Jones killed his employer by the administration of chloroform at the direct instigation of Patrick.

At the close of Recorder Goff's charge, which occupied the morning session of the court, the jury retired. This was at 1:50 p. m. At 5:55 they notified the officer in charge that they were ready to return to court.

At the word "guilty," pronounced by Foreman Machell in a tone low but distinct enough to be heard throughout the court, not the slightest change passed over Patrick's face. Recorder Goff, at the request of the prisoner's counsel, fixed on a week from Monday as the day on which to pronounce sentence.

Race Riot in Alabama.

[illegible] cial to the Age-Herald from Jasper, Ala., says information has just been received here of a race riot 12 miles east of Jasper late Wednesday afternoon. One hundred and fifty shots are reported to have been exchanged, but the casualties cannot be ascertained. A farmer named Murray came in about 7 o'clock for ammunition and has returned. Sheriff Moore has asked Gov. Jelks to call out the local militia company, and the men are now getting ready to respond to the call, which is momentarily expected. The trouble has been brewing for some time and is the outgrowth of bitter racial feeling, which was further accentuated by white men whipping two negroes on the charge of stealing.

Wood Wants Maine Raised.

Washington, March 27.—Gen. Wood has brought to the attention of the war department, through the medium of a formal letter, the propriety of making some arrangement for raising the wreck of the Maine from the ooze and mud in which she lies embedded in Havana harbor. It is stated by him that not only are there sentimental reasons for this, owing to the fact that, according to common belief, the remains of 40 or 50 American sailors lie within the sunken hulk, but this heavy steel structure is also a menace and obstruction to navigation in the harbor of Havana, and it is our duty to the Cubans to remove it.

Will Try to Prevent Cholera.

Washington, March 27.—The navy department has given Rear Admiral Frank Wildes, the ranking admiral of the Philippines, authority to take such steps as may be necessary to prevent the spread of the cholera epidemic which prevails at Manila, to the officers and men of the naval establishment at Cavite. As far as can be learned here, the epidemic is confined to the natives and Chinese in Manila, and does not prevail among the whites.

Life Guards.

The Life Guards are two regiments of cavalry forming part of the British household troops. They are gallant soldiers, and every loyal British heart is proud of them. Not only the king's household, but yours, ours, everybody's should have it's life guards. The need of them is especially great when the greatest foes of life, diseases, find allies in the very elements, as colds, influenza, catarrh, the grip and pneumonia do in the stormy month of March. The best way that we know of to guard against these diseases is to strengthen the system with Hood's Sarsaparilla—the greatest of all life guards. It removes the conditions in which those diseases make their most successful attack, gives vigor and tone tc all the vital organs and functions, and imparts a genial warmth to the blood. Remember the weaker the system the greater the exposure to disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the system strong.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

By local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

CHAPTER VIII.

SOME STARTLING REVELATIONS.

"ARE you quite sure that you were not followed?" she inquired after their greetings were over.

"Quite so, senorita," replied Wyndham, with a smile.

Then in a few words he related all that he had done to obviate such a possibility, and she laughed heartily at his description.

Craig Wyndham had prepared to encounter beauty when he entered the presence of Carmen del Puente, and yet when the reality was before him he was conscious of a shock of surprise. Beauty in women had never affected him beyond the point of mere admiration, but the earnest, steadfast eyes, perfect features and high character that shone in the face of Carmen del Puente awoke some hitherto dormant sense of appreciation within him. Before he had been ten minutes in her presence he felt as if they were old friends, as if somehow or somewhere they had known each other always.

There were sincerity, truth, earnestness, high purpose and indomitable resolution in every expression of her features, in every gesture she made, and Wyndham, who rarely trusted anybody until that person had been thoroughly tried, felt that he might with complacency put implicit trust in this woman.

"We have a long interview before us, Mr. Wyndham," she said presently. "I want you to be comfortable and thoroughly at your ease, so I have taken the liberty of providing some very excellent cigars for you to smoke. You need not hesitate. You know, in my country we are accustomed to tobacco smoke. You will be more comfortable if you can waste your temper on the end of a cigar when I say things to annoy or astonish you."

He took her at her word without comment. They sat opposite each other at one end of the room, while the duenna remained at the other, industriously sewing or knitting or doing drawnwork, Wyndham could not tell which.

"I believe our talk was to be about the duel," he began by way of opening.

"I think," she replied slowly, "that the duel is only an incident among many others we are likely to discuss. I told you this afternoon that I was a former friend of Mr. Pendleton. That statement was quite true, though somewhat misleading. I was his friend, but he did not know it. It is possible that he regarded me in a contrary light. It is strange, if he mentioned the duel to you, he did not speak of me."

"He might have done so, senorita, had his life been spared a few hours more. We were to have discussed his affairs the evening of his death, but he was murdered before I arrived."

"Murdered!"

She leaped to her feet with flashing eyes and for support grasped the back of the chair on which she had been seated. For a moment she stood gazing, wide eyed, at Wyndham, and then slowly she reseated herself.

"Did you not know that he was murdered?" asked Wyndham calmly.

"No. I knew that he was dead, of course. Word came to me of that in a letter from this city, but there was nothing said about violence."

"The papers were full of the affair."

"Ah, yes. But such news seldom reaches us in Mexico. Murdered! My God! It is awful! I should have warned him of his danger. I might have done so, but I did not regard it as necessary. Tell me about it, Mr. Wyndham."

"There is not much that I can tell. The affair is a great mystery. I believe the detectives are still at work upon the case, but only in the effort to find a man whom I know to be innocent."

"Tell me about it," she repeated. "Tell me all you know about it."

She uttered the words in the tone of one who has the right to know, and Wyndham, with sudden confidence that was inexplicable to himself, complied. He related in detail everything that occurred from the moment when he first met Pendleton after his return from Mexico until the discovery of the body and the sending away of old James in order that he might be suspected. Two things only he omitted—he did not mention the fact that he suspected Escudera of the crime, and he said nothing about his belief that an explanation of the motive could be found in the secret matter connected with Pendleton's visit to Mexico. Nor did he refer to that brief instant when he stood before the dead body of his friend and glanced back toward the open door as if to measure the distance. He had thought then that the weapon was thrown at its victim from the doorway, but he had never mentioned that idea to anybody. Even now he remained silent concerning it.

She heard him through to the end without uttering a word in reply, but when he had finished she said very quietly:

"Describe to me again the room where you found him; or, better—have you a pencil?—draw me a diagram of it."

He did so, and she studied it long and earnestly. Presently she asked:

"Is there nothing between this point"—she placed the point of the pencil on the spot which he had indicated as the position of the chair—"and this?" She touched the place marked doorway. "I mean by that, is there no chandelier or table with a tall object upon it directly on a line drawn from here to here?" And she indicated the two points again.

"Nothing whatever—not even a chair," he replied.

Carmen rose from her chair and crossed the floor twice. Then she returned and resumed her seat.

"Mr. Wyndham," she said slowly and impressively, "did you ever hear that a favorite pastime among Mexicans is knife throwing?"

"Yes."

"How far is it from the door to the chair where you found him?"

"About twenty feet."

"My friend—you will permit me to so regard you—the knife or dagger or whatever it was that took the life of Burr Pendleton was thrown from the doorway, and he did not even see the arm that hurled it. But, Mr. Wyndham," and she leaped to her feet in considerable excitement, "I have seen that arm and that hand many times, and so have you!"

"Possibly," replied Wyndham, unmoved.

"You know, then? You know?" she demanded.

"No, senorita, I do not know; I only suspect. But I mean to know some time."

"Ah, but I know now. I do not suspect—I know."

"Well?"

Carmen buried her face in her hands, but she did not weep. She was thinking.

"I can see it all," she said finally. "He pretended to leave the rooms, but he did not do so. He remained. He watched his opportunity. When it came, he stepped to the door, pushed it softly open, wide enough for his purpose, and then he threw the knife and walked quietly out of the house. Yes, I can see it. I know it is so."

"Of whom are you speaking, senorita?"

"I am speaking of Carlos Escudera, my own cousin."

"Good God!" exclaimed Wyndham.

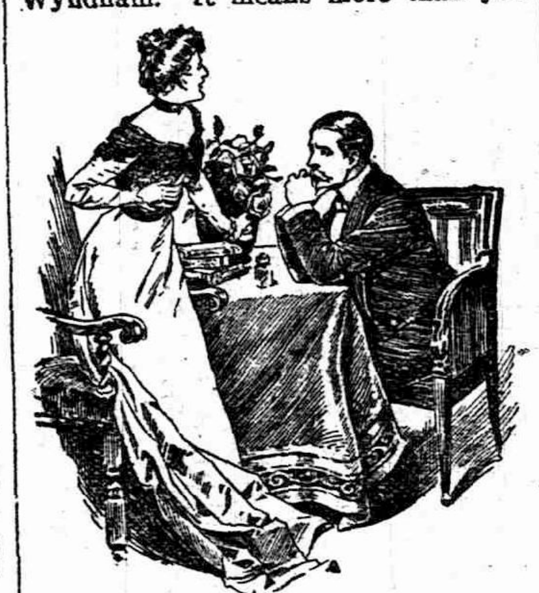
"What? Did you not suspect him?"

"Yes, but"—

"But it shocks you to hear that he is related to me?"

"Yes. I think that is what startled me."

"I thank you for that thought, Mr. Wyndham. It means more than you intended it should or more than you thought when you uttered it. My mother was a Romero. Escudera's mother was her sister. His name is, in Spanish, Escudera y Romero. My name is Del Puente y Romero. Do you understand?"



She leaped to her feet with flashing eyes.

"Yes. Who, then, is the Romero with whom Burr fought the duel?"

"Ah! We have not arrived at that point yet. I will explain it all to you when we do, but first let us finish with this one. Does Escudera know that you suspect him?"

"I don't know; I don't think so. Pardon me if I insist upon returning to the name of the duelist. Tell me, is Escudera related to him?"

"They are cousins also."

"And is Captain Romero also a cousin of yours?"

"I do not like to admit that, Mr. Wyndham. Please remember that I have not done so. You will think all my relatives are murderers."

"Pardon me. I am a brute. I am"—

"You are the living friend of the man who was foully murdered. I am the cousin of the brute who murdered him. But I am even more than that, Mr. Wyndham; more than that even to Carlos Escudera, for I am his affianced wife."

It was Wyndham's turn to leap to his feet, more agitated than he remembered ever to have been before. His heavy brows drew down in an ugly scowl over his eyes, half shading them, and his square jaws set themselves together with indomitable resolve. But the expression lasted only an instant. Then his face cleared into a settled look of utter contempt.

"So," he said, "you brought me here to trap me with your beauty. You brought me here to induce me to spare from the electric chair the murderer whom you would marry, whose wife you would become. You brought me here at the bidding of Escudera, to worm out of me for his sake all I know. You would make me an accomplice with you in"—

She held up one hand, and he paused. There was no anger in her face. He saw with amazement that there were tears in her eyes, and he ground his teeth in renewed rage when he discovered that she was smiling through them.

"You forget that it was I who denounced him, not you. You did not permit me to finish what I was saying," she said. "I am the affianced wife of Carlos Escudera, but I hate him—oh, how I hate him! As only a woman of my blood can hate! He killed Burr Pendleton. For that, woman though I am, there is no torture to which I would not willingly consign him. He killed Burr Pendleton! He killed my"—

She broke down and wept then with sobs that shook her as a raging storm troubles the sea, sinking upon the chair again and burying her face in her hands.

Craig watched her silently. He was wise enough to know that it was best to permit the storm to pass without interruption. He felt that a great revelation had fallen upon him like a flood of light. A great pity for her filled his heart. He knew how engagements are entered into in Spanish countries and that the woman is never consulted regarding the choice that is made for her, and he knew—he thought he knew—that this woman had loved Burr.

That of itself was sufficient in his heart to render her and her wishes dear to him. He asked himself in that moment of waiting, "If I, a man, loved Burr Pendleton so dearly, how utterly must she, a woman, have loved him?"

When her sobs ceased, he was standing beside her, and he touched her gently upon her shoulder. He forgot his own harsh words, forgot that he had uttered them, for he knew, in the other and greater sorrow, she had not heeded them.

"Was he so dear to you, senorita?" he asked. "Did you love Burr like that?"

She raised her face and looked into his eyes. Then she rose and stood beside him.

"Yes," she said, "I loved him. I think I would have worshiped him had he lived. He was all that I had left to love, but he died without knowing it—without knowing me."

"Without knowing you?" repeated Craig. "I do not understand."

She placed one delicate hand on either of his shoulders and looked steadily into his eyes with an expression that Craig Wyndham never forgot.

"You were his friend, and you will be my friend," she said. "Mr. Wyndham, Burr Pendleton's father was my father. He was my brother. I was his sister, and he is dead and never knew it. Oh, if I had only told him all that night! But I did not dare—I did not dare. You will believe me? You will not doubt me? He was my brother—my brother! And I was so proud of him! I loved him—I loved him!"

In her great sorrow she forgot all else. She remembered only that she was in the presence of the man who had been her brother's friend and who would be her friend, and she laid her head against his stalwart shoulder and wept anew.

HOME AND CHILD

Does your horse "feel his oats"? What a difference between the grain-fed and the grass-fed horse! The first strong and full of ginger, the second flabby, weak and tired out before he begins. The feeding makes the difference.

Children are not alike either. One is rosy, bright-eyed, full of life and laughter, another is pale, weak and dull. The feeding again is responsible.

Sickly children need special feeding. They don't "feel their oats". Scott's Emulsion adds just the right richness to their diet. It is like grain to the horse. The child gets new appetite and strong digestion.

Scott's Emulsion is more than food. It is a strong medicine. It rouses up dull children, puts new flesh on thin ones and red blood into pale ones. It makes children grow. Scott's Emulsion makes ordinary food do its duty.

This picture represents the Trade Mark of Scott's Emulsion and is on the wrapper of every bottle.

TECUMSEH CHAPTER

No. 42, Royal Arch Masons Tender

AN ELABORATE BANQUET

To Brother Companions of Detroit, Adrian and Neighboring Towns, Mar. 26, 1902.

For this occasion the opera house was tastefully decorated, drapes of red and white bunting hung in graceful folds over the stage, setting forth in great prominence a large emblem of the Chapter, worked in red upon a white background. Large, beautiful palms, in green luxuriance, afforded a striking background for tastefully arranged bouquets of red tulips.

In the decoration and arrangement of tables, the ladies proved themselves highly efficient, the large bouquets of red carnations together with the blending of the colors of many dishes, placed across the covers, could not but offer an inviting welcome to the visitors.

The first part of the evening was given over to work at the lodge rooms, the Peninsular Chapter, No. 16, of Detroit, conferred the R. A. M. degrees. Business at the rooms being concluded, the Companions adjourned to the opera house, Mrs. J. Q. Look playing the march. During the supper the first part of the program was rendered, consisting of the following selections:

Male Quartette—Dickinson, Maddox, Abrams, Slater.

Piano Solo—Miss Julia Lowry.

Trio—Miss Anna McClure, Mrs. Hodges, W. S. Dickinson.

Piano Solo—Miss Ethel Slayton.

A committee of five ladies, Mrs. S. W. Anderson chairman, with forty-five ladies to assist, served the several courses, after which the remainder of the program was tendered.

Toast Master—J. D. Shull.

Trio—Miss Anna McClure, Mrs. Hodges, W. S. Dickinson.

Toast, "Our Quests"—R. A. Heesen.

Toast, "From Detroit to Tecumseh"—E. E. Appleton, Detroit.

Male Quartette—Dickinson, Maddox, Abrams, Slater.

Toast, "From Babylon to Jerusalem"—S. P. Hosmer.

Song—Mr. Weir, Detroit.

Toast, "Workman from the Quarries"—Dr. J. H. Reynolds, Adrian.

Duet—Miss McClure, Mrs. Hodges.

Toast, "On the Square"—Dr. J. W. Nixon, Holloway.

Ventriloqual Selections—Mr. Lou Burt, Detroit.

J. H. Kingsley, of Manchester, and L. M. Kellogg, of this place, were also on the program for toasts, but owing to the lateness of the hour it was found necessary to leave them out.

The good management of the banquet went to prove that the ladies were on the "Square," as well as the Brothers, and it was not until the early hours of morning that the banquet closed, each visitor giving praise to the fine work at the lodge and the sumptuous spread given in their honor. A special train was waiting to convey the Brothers of the Detroit Chapter to their respective homes, in the memory of whom will ever linger the kind esteem and friendly greeting afforded to them by Chapter No. 42, Royal Arch Masons.

Michael Karcher.

Born in the village of Spillbach, Germany Jan. 23, 1823, died in Macon, Michigan, 23rd of March, 1902, aged 79 years. He leaves to mourn his departure besides a widow, three children, Mrs. Emma Miller, Macon, Henry Karcher, Macon, and Theodore Karcher, Tecumseh.

His funeral was held from the German Lutheran church, Lake Ridge, he having been a member of this church since its organization, and was conducted by Rev. Paul Woldt, the pastor.

The services were attended by people from all the surrounding country as well as by many from away. Mr. Karcher was loved and respected for his thriftyness and honesty by all who knew him. Although his loss will be felt by the whole community it comes with great vigor to the widow and children to whom he has been so much for so many years. That all might hear and understand the last words for their old friend, the services were conducted in both German and English.

Those from away who attended the funeral were Gottlich Almemiller and Matthew Jenson and daughter, of Chelsea, Mrs. Fisher, M. Mulzer, Fred Mulzer and Misses Mary and Maggie Mulzer, of Adrian, Mrs. John Beckley, Mrs. Henry Smith, Miss Lizzie Smith and Geo. Smith and family, of Tecumseh, and Geo. and Charles Klager, of Bridgewater.

CARD OF THANKS.

We desire to express our heartfelt thanks to all who so kindly assisted us in our recent affliction.

Are Your Clothes Faded.

Everybody must wear out one pair of fool's shoes.

Peculiar To Itself

In what it is and what it does—containing the best blood-purifying, alterative and tonic substances and effecting the most radical and permanent cures of all humors and all eruptions, relieving weak, tired, languid feelings, and building up the whole system—is true only of

Hood's Sarsaparilla

No other medicine acts like it; no other medicine has done so much real, substantial good, no other medicine has restored health and strength at so little cost.

"I was troubled with scrofula and came near losing my eyesight. For four months I could not see to do anything. After taking two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla I could see to walk, and when I had taken eight bottles I could see as well as ever." SUSIE A. HAIRSTON, Withers, N. C.

Hood's Sarsaparilla promises to cure and keeps the promise.

Millinery Openings.

The millinery openings yesterday were all well worth attending, each one of the four stores being beautifully gotten up for the occasion.

Mrs. Hanford's show windows were too small to admit of a window display worthy the scene inside, but those who called were cordially welcomed and shown a host of charmingly trimmed hats.

Miss Hough had a window exhibit, novel and lovely. "Your heart's desire in millinery" was shown encased in and surrounded by heasts formed of the flowers used for trimmings and the store within was as pleasing view from outside.

At Miss Pierce's, Miss Floy Freeman dispensed frappe to the many callers who were attracted by the millinery display and the firms well known artistic taste.

Miss Power is almost a new comer here but a large crowd witnessed to the popularity of her designs. She entertained callers with chocolate and wafers over which Miss Florence Lowry presided, while a music box furnished music for the many.

A Printer Greatly Surprised

"I never was so much surprised in my life, as I was with the results of using Chamberlain's Pain Balm," says Henry T. Crook, pressman of the Asheville, N. C. Gazette. "I contracted a severe case of rheumatism early last winter by getting my feet wet. I tried several things for it without benefit. One day while looking over the Gazette, I noticed that Pain Balm was positively guaranteed to cure rheumatism, so bought a bottle of it and before using two thirds of it my rheumatism had taken its flight and I have not had a rheumatic pain since." Sold by J. J. Orr.

D. T. & M. Officials.

A party of Lake Shore officials called in Tecumseh Wednesday, the party having come in a Lake Shore special direct from New York City. It consisted of E. D. Worcester, vice president, E. D. Worcester, Jr., H. A. Worcester, division superintendent, and an attorney from New York City.

The business was the annual meeting of the stockholders of the D. T. & M and it was held at the D. T. & M. station. Newberry Satterthwaite and John Hughes were inspectors of the meeting. The party left in the afternoon and returned directly to New York.

A Pointer.

There is no time like the spring of the year to make improvements and fix things up in good shape for the convenience whole year. If our new council would take the matter of new sidewalks in hand early this spring by fall all the old and dangerous walks would be rebuilt.

There are some walks on Chicago street that are in a deplorable and dangerous condition and should be rebuilt at once. Would it not be a good plan for the council to take steps at once to have the walks inspected and new ones built where needed. With the present law it is no hardship for property holders to build new walks when needed.

Lagrippe coughs yield quickly to the wonderful curative qualities of Foley's Honey and Tar. There is nothing else 'just as good." John J. Orr.

Mrs. Farrington's Whereabouts.

The whereabouts of Mrs. Bert Farrington are not known to the officers here. The impression prevails that she met Farrington while he was out on bail, awaiting sentence and that they have fully decided on a plan to pursue and that she is carrying out her part of the agreement. and will find work in some city where she is not known.—Free Press.

First National Convention.

On May 26, 1835, what was probably the first national nominating convention in the history of the country met in Baltimore. It was attended by 600 men, a majority of whom were residents of Maryland. The convention was called by General Jackson. It was called a year ahead of the presidential campaign in order that time might be taken by the forelock in behalf of General Jackson's political protege, Martin Van Buren.—Gunton's Magazine.

Not to Be Learned.

A dignified bishop while passing along a London street heard three vegetable peddlers engaged in a rather blasphemous argument.

Intending to rebuke them, he said to one of the offenders, "My good man, where did you learn to swear like that?"

"Lord luv yer, guv'nor," replied the brawny peddler, clapping him genially on the shoulder, "ye can't learn it! It's a gift!"

A GOOD THING

Something you can readily believe as its Tecumseh Evidence

Mrs. B. E. Gray of Tecumseh, Mich., says: "Last summer I had an attack of fever which left me in a weak, dizzy and nervous state. I got a box of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Pills at Chas. A. Wright's drug store and after using the pills I can say my nerves were strengthened and I felt better every way. I think the pills all right."

A COMMON ERROR.

The same Mistake is Made by Many Tecumseh People.

It's a common error.
To plaster the aching back.
To rub with liniment rheumatic joints
When the trouble comes from the kidneys.
Doan's Kidney Pills cure all kidney ills.
And are endorsed by Tecumseh citizens.

Vet. O. Austen, who lives with his son in the northeast section of Tecumseh, says: "I am more than thankful that Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my notice for they did me a great deal of good, in fact they stopped a dull aching pain in my back which had annoyed me for years, and also rendered the action of the kidney secretions normal which at times were too frequent and highly colored. I tried a number of so called kidney cures but I did not receive any benefit before I learned about Doan's Kidney Pills and I knew people who had used them so I went to C. A. Wright's drug store and got them. To say I entertain a very favorable opinion of them as a kidney medicine is putting it in mild terms. They are all and more than they are represented to be."

For sale by all dealers: Price 50 cents per box, Foster-Milburn company, Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States. Remember the name Doan's and take no substitute.

Under date of March 6, Carl Wisner writes from Chicago: "Last Monday night I saw Prince Henry fron my window. Nothing extraordinary in his appearance except his uniform. A rather unobtrusive looking young man, not nearly so distinguished looking as Mayor Harrison who sat beside him in the open ladiau, in which the two rode together. Royalty is common place except for the gilding. I stood in Mr. Eastman's court room the other day behind a slight, smooth shaven, boyish looking fellow, with a frank engaging face and pleasant smile, and found it hard to realize that it was G. H. Phillips the some time "Corn King," who for months controlled the world's corn and wheat market, who now with the gamblers luck has played the market once too often.

Manila, March 27.—Noriel, the only insurgent general with the exception of Malvar still in the field, has been captured by Lieut. Frank E. Bamford of the Twenty-eighth infantry.

A major, a captain, a lieutenant and five men who were acting as a bodyguard to Noriel were captured with him. They have all been held as prisoners of war. There is some reason to believe that one member of this bodyguard is Gen. Malvar in disguise. Lieut. Bamford is certain that if this general is not one of the captured party he is in the immediate neighborhood of the scene of Noriel's capture.

Noriel has been one of the recognized leaders of the insurrection since 1899. He was captured on his way to the coast while endeavoring to escape. He admits that the insurrection, as such, is over, and says that the few remaining leaders are fleeing, as they do not command enough men to warrant surrenders commensurate with their rank.

Having a run on Chamberlain's Cough Remedy

Between the hours of eleven o'clock a. m. and closing time at night on Jan. 25th, 1901, A. F. Clark, druggist, Glade Springs, Va. sold twelve bottles of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He says: "I never handled a medicine that sold better or gave better satisfaction to my customers." This remedy has been in general use in Virginia for many years, and the people there are well acquainted with its excellent qualities. Many of them have testified to the remarkable cures which it has effected. When you need a good, reliable medicine for a cold or cough, or attack of the grip, use Ceamberlain's Cough Remedy and you are certain to be more than pleased with the quick cure which it affords. I was almost dead and the doctors told me I could not get well without an operation, but the new discovery, Kid-Ne-Oids cured me. Sold by

Does it Pay to Buy Cheap?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the more severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible for you, then in either case take the ONLY remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung trouble, "Boschee's German Syrup." It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest, and cures the patient. Try one bottle. Recommended many years by all druggists in the world. Get Green's Prize Almanac at J. J. Orr's.

HE FEARED HE HAD LOST

When Wu Ting Fang, the famous Chinese Minister to Washington, irritable and somewhat forgetful from a severe cold, missed one day from the front of his cap the immense diamond he always wears there, he was dreadfully frightened. A friend pointed out that the statesman had inadvertently donned his turban wrong side before, and that the diamond was safe in the rear. Had Wu Ting Fang been wearing a Benson's Porous Plaster on his chest or back to cure his cold, he never would have doubted its location. He would have felt it doing its work,—warming and making flexible the torpid muscles, extracting the pain and soreness, promoting the free circulation of the blood, stimulating the skin and lungs to proper action, and so dissolving and banishing the malady. Thus we perceive, beloved friends, that while a pretty thing to look upon, was of no practical use. But Benson's Plasters are supremely useful. They relieve and cure gout, rheumatism, neuralgia, colds on the chest, lame back, etc., so quickly and completely as to make you wonder how it can be. Better now,—well to-morrow; that's the way they work. Get the genuine. All druggists, or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on receipt of 25c. each.

THE BIG DIAMOND ON HIS HAT

CHURCHES DOOMED

Storm in Pennsylvania Seemed Bent on Destroying Them.

SEVERAL EDIFICES UNROOFED

Falling Walls Injured a Number of Persons--Injuries to Some Will Likely Prove Fatal—Much Other Damage Done.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 31.—One of the fiercest wind storms ever known in this section struck the city Sunday just before noon and did almost incalculable damage to property and injured many people, some of whom may die from the effects of their wounds Scores of houses were unroofed, many trees blown down, mill stacks toppled over and telegraph and telephone wires generally disabled. The most serious accident reported was the unroofing of the Knoxville Presbyterian church in Knoxville. The church at the time was filled with an Easter congregation numbering about [illegible]00 persons. While the minister was in the midst of his sermon, a particularly strong gust of wind blew over the large chimney and lifted a portion of the roof of the building. The bricks from the chimney crashed through the roof and carried a huge piece of the hardwood ceiling, measuring about 40-20 feet, down upon the worshippers in the pews. An indescribable panic ensued and a frantic rush was made for the doors and windows. The excitement was soon quieted and the work of rescue begun. At least 40 persons were caught by the wreckage and more or less hurt. Of this number five may not recover.

In none of the other accidents reported throughout the city were there any serious injuries to person, though many narrow escapes are recorded. The towboat Belle McGowan was blown over in the Ohio river, opposite Saw Mill Run, and completely wrecked. Her crew narrowly escaped drowning, but all were finally rescued by harbor boats.

The corrugated iron roof of the Union bridge at the point was lifted by the wind and parts of it carried a distance of a mile. The Whittier school house on Mount Washington was unroofed and its walls badly twisted.

Jones & Laughlin had 14 of their furnace stacks blown down, necessitating the shutting down of a portion of their plant for weeks.

As Rev. J. W. English, pastor of the Robinson Run U. P. church, near McDonald, was raising his arms to pronounce the benediction, lightning struck the church spire and it toppled upon the roof, crushing it and injuring a number of worshippers, two of whom will die.

The spire and part of the roof of the U. P. church at McDonald was torn off and the building considerably damaged, but no one was injured.

The Nobleston Presbyterian church was also unroofed, but the congregation escaped injury.

Greenville, Pa., March 31.—The Easter services being held in the United Presbyterian church at Jamestown, this county, six miles north of here, came to an abrupt ending, at 12 o'clock Sunday. The sky became overcast and a funnel-shaped cloud was seen approaching from the northwest. The tail dipped to the ground just before the church was reached. The congregation became uneasy, but the pastor, Rev. J. M. Jamison, continued the services. All of a sudden there was a terrific crash and part of the south end of the church crashed in, burying the minister beneath bricks and timbers. The men of the congregation rushed to the pulpit, and when the stricken minister was removed from the debris it was found he had received fatal injuries. His jaw was broken and the temporal bone crushed. He can not survive. The storm was the worst that has occurred in this section for years.

Fire Burns State Printing Plant.

Guthrie, Ok., March 31.—Guthrie was visited Sunday by a $350,000 fire, and as result the state capital printing plant, the Hotel Capitol, the St. James hotel, the Cammack livery barn and the Richey general merchandise store are in ruins. Everything in the Capital plant was destroyed, including two presses, machines of every kind, linotype machines, electric and steam heating systems, libraries and a large stock of supplies. Frank H. Greer, the owner, states that the total loss is $250,000. Not a thing but mailing lists of the paper was saved. The loss in the other buildings will make the entire loss to the town fully $350,000.

Boys Tried to Wreck a Train.

Trenton, Mo., March 31.—George Burch, aged 16 years, and George Young, aged 20, sons of respectable parents of this city, made an unsuccessful attempt Saturday night to wreck an eastbound Chicago, Roch Island & Pacific train about five miles east of here. The track at this point is on a high embankment, and a derailment could scarcely have occurred without the loss of many lives. Both boys were arrested and have confessed. Their motive appears to have been revenge for having been put off a freight train. Dime novels also are believed to have played a part.

Believed He Committed Suicide.

Chicago, March 31.—Covered with snow and mud and with a revolver clutched in the right hand, the body of Howard R. Miller, a student at the Keokuk college of physicians and surgeons at Keokuk, Ia., was found in Lincoln park here yesterday. Miller had been dead several hours when his body was found. It is believed he ended his life while despondent on account of over study. He came to Chicago from Keokuk last Thursday.

A nearly Fatal Runaway.

Started a horrible ulcer on the leg of J. B. Orner, Franklin Grove, Ill. which defied doctors and all remedies for four years. Then Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him. Just as good for boils, burns bruises, cuts, corns, scalds, skin eruptions and piles, 25c at C. A. Wright's drug store.

AMONG THE INSANE

Matter of Entertaining Michigan's Charges Taken Up.

CHAMBERLAIN HAS THEORIES

Says That Music Is Specially Advantageous—Would Institute Educational Classes and Also Recommends Games of Chance and Skill.

Lansing, Mich., March 31.—At the last meeting of the joint boards of control of the several asylums of Michigan the subject of amusement and instruction as factors in the treatment of the insane created interest.

Supt. Chamberlain of the upper peninsula hospital at Newberry said that in melancholia there is not only mental depression and great mental pain from morbid delusions, etc., but the body is impaired. The central nervous system controls all the affected organs, and when the centers are stimulated and the functions of the organs diverted into physiological channels, circulation improves and there is general improvement of the entire constitution.

The forms of amusement that can be properly instituted in the asylums were said to be private theatricals, dancing, band and orchestra music, card games, billiards and pool, bowling, authors and many other small games for the inside of the house, and baseball, skating and many tests of skill and strength that are common to our schools and universities for outdoors.

Dr. Chamberlain said that probably the one form of amusement that all patients most enjoy is music. He was forcibly impressed with this fact recently when the music-loving employes of the Newberry hospital gave a concert.

Games of skill and chance have the advantage over mere occupation for the reason that the patient who engages in them must exert his will power, while the person who is merely occupied does not necessarily have to constantly keep his mind on his work and may be turning over and over in his mind his many fancied wrongs.

Instruction also is an important figure in the opinion of Dr. Chamberlain, who said that classes should be formed in the elementary branches. Patients with aesthetic tastes enjoy classes in painting and drawing as taught by the simple methods employed in the public schools.

The superintendents of the other asylums and members of the board who discussed Dr. Chamberlain's paper, warmly commended it, and some of them advocated the establishment of gymnasiums, contending that in view of the obvious impossibility of giving patients a great deal of outdoor exercise, this training would supply a generally recognized need.

Depraved Wretch Gets 25 Years.

Jackson, Mich., March 31.—Judge Peck sentenced Frank Biery, who pleaded guilty to criminal assault upon his 14-year-old stepdaughter, to 25 years in prison. In passing sentence the judge gave Biery a severe lecture. He was of no use to himself or anybody else, and it was better for himself and society that he be locked up for a long term of years. Biery is 33 years old, but totally depraved. He set up as justification that his wife, the mother of his victim, made no objections, and that the whole thing was simply a family matter. He is the man who shot and killed Archie Whitehouse at the charivari when he was married a year ago, and was acquitted by a jury.

Cut His Throat and Wrist.

Kalamazoo, Mich., March 31.—Albert D. Brooks, a farmer living six miles southwest of here, while crazed from effects of drink, gashed his throat with a piece of glass fearfully, and nearly severed the arteries of his wrist. He fainted from loss of blood, but revived and dragged himself to the office of Dr. McKibben, where his wounds were dressed. The man was adjudged insane and will be sent to an asylum.

Look Out for Them.

Detroit, Mich., March 31.—A gang of swindlers is canvassing various parts of the country for so-called business directories or state gareteers, and has commenced operations in Detroit. They never publish anything. Their scheme is to collect money in advance or procure signatures to contracts which, by altering or dividing, are converted into promissory notes or contracts for payment of money for which no value is ever given.

MICHIGAN BRIEFS.

Ella Rinn, a 6-year-old child of St. Clair, is dead of injuries received by being run over by a bicyclist.

Hancock boasts of a boy in the person of Louis Moilomen who, though but 16 years old, is 6 feet 9 inches tall weighs 250 pounds.

May 1 the two well-known Coldwater hotels, the Southern Michigan and the Arlington, will come under the management of V. K. Brown.

Fire Saturday morning destroyed the training stables belonging to Frank Colby at Highland Park, Detroit, burning up 17 valuable horses.

Frank Moats, an electric lineman of Benton Harbor, has fallen heir to $5,000 from an uncle in Chicago. His three children also receive $3,000 each.

The three flouring mills of Hillsdale have formed a combination with the grocers, by which they agree to sell only the product of the Hillsdale mills.

The Grand Rapids & Chicago electric road will install steam power plants if its differences with the Kalamazoo Valley Traction Co. concerning the building of a dam near Allegan are not soon settled.

An Annoying Question.

Teddy—Mamma, Tommy knocked me down on the way home from school today. (After a pause.) But I gave him a bat in the eye!

Mamma—Before he knocked you down, Teddy, or afterward?—Somerville Journal.

Naturally.

"Josiah," asked Mrs. Chugwater, "what is a bucket shop?"

"It's a place, I suppose," replied Mr. Chugwater, looking impatiently up from his newspaper, "where they empty the water out of stocks."—Chicago Tribune.

MANY LIVES LOST

Terrible Storms in Tennessee Cause Enormous Damage.

WESTERN TRAINS STALLED

A Lake Thirty Miles Long Formed Over Tracks of the U. P. in North Dakota—Damages in Tennessee Will Aggregate $4,000,000.

Nashville, Tenn., March 31.—Reports from the flooded districts of Tennessee emphasize the gravity of the situation. The damage resulting, it is believed, will reach $4,000,000, while 22 lives are known to have been lost Several counties, certain to have suffered heavily, are still cut off from communication, and the loss in property and life may go higher than these figures.

From figures available, the following fatalities are given:

Pulaski, 11: Houston Connor, Sarah Phillips, John Cole, wife and three children; Slick White, wife and two children, all colored, and negro baby. Lewisburg, three: Anna Robinson, two children of Joe McClellan, all colorel. Murfreesboro: —— Williams, colored (girl). McMinnville, five: Mrs. Blevin and three children; Henry Madewell. Harriman, two: Unknown. After a perilous night in the top of a tree in the Hermitage district, three men were rescued at an early hour Sunday morning.

Knoxville, Tenn., March 31.—The loss by the flood which swept Emery valley Saturday may reach nearly a million dollars in Roane and Morgan counties when the full story is known. At Harriman the loss will be between $55,000 and $125,000. The flooded section of Harriman presents a desolate appearance. Marks of the flood are plaintly to be seen, and the whole country presents a devastated appearance. The city's light plant cannot be operated for a week or more. The majority of the homeless are housed in the gymnasium of the American Temperance university.

Zolfo, Fla., March 31.—During a thunderstorm in this section Sunday, which did considerable damage, Peter Low and Alonza Whidden, two well-known men, were instantly killed at the place of Whidden, near here.

Crown Point, Ind., March 31.—A bolt of lightning during a snow storm yesterday struck the farm house of Christopher Larson, near this city, and set fire to the structure. Mrs. Larson and her 10-year-old daughter were found in the ruins burned to a crisp.

St. Paul, Minn., March 31.—Transcontinental traffic by the northern routes continues to be blockaded. The Northern Pacific's efforts to transfer passengers across the lake formed by the overflowing of the sloughs near McKenzie, N. D., have proved futile, and but little hope is held out for a resumption of business in the immediate future.

The situation of the Northern Pacific is extremely serious. Reports from McKenzie are to the effect that a lake 30 miles long and two miles wide has formed, and the tracks are 10 feet under water, or perhaps entirely washed out. The wind has been so high and the water so rough that much danger has attended the attempt to transfer passengers in small skiffs.

The Storm in Michigan.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 31.—Reports last night from the lake cities and towns show the storm of Sunday did a large amount of damage, particularly to telegraph and telephone lines. The lines are all down along the lake shore, and Traverse City, Manistee and Ludington are cut off. At St. Joseph, $1,500 damage was done by the storm to wire service and buildings. Muskegon reports telephone service badly crippled, wires being down in all parts of the city and outlying districts. The lake last night was so rough and the waves rolling so high that the Goodrich line steamers did not venture out. The Barry line steamers also remained in port. The temperature fell 15 points during the day and last night a snow squall prevailed. At Grand Haven the storm did considerable damage to wires.

Do You Know Your Letters?

Any man who can read would probably resent such an imputation of ignorance as this question conveys. "Do you know your letters?" is what is asked the little tot when he or she first sets foot in school. But grownup men and women may be pardoned for believing they are speaking the truth when they answer "yes" to the question. The chances are, however, that they don't know their letters. Why has "A" its present shape? Stumped the first time! Every A-merican ought to know that. A takes its shape from a picture of an eagle. B was once the picture of an Egyptian bird. D represented a man's hand. F was the horned viper. The two upper strokes are the remains of the horns and the perpendicular line the upright body of the viper. H was once the semblance of a sieve.

We got our letters from the Phœnician alphabet, which in turn came from the hieroglyphic picture writing of Egypt. So don't be so sure of your knowledge next time you are asked a simple question.

His Ideal.

"Gracious! You don't mean to say you are going to move out to Bogville?"

"Indeed I am. I consider it an ideal place."

"Huh! You ought to read the papers. There's more sickness there than in any other town in this vicinity."

"I know it. I'm a physician."

The Great Dismal Swamp.

Of Virginia is a breeding ground of Malaria germs, so is low, wet or marshy ground everywhere. These germs cause weakness, chills and fever, aches in the bones and muscles and may induce dangerous maladies. But Electric Bitters never fail to destroy them and cure malarial troubles. They will surely prevent typhoid. "We tried many remedies for malaria and Stomach and liver troubles," writes John Charleston, of Byesville, O., "but never found anything as good as Electric Bitters." Try them. Only 50c at C. A. Wright's, guarantee satisfaction.

HOPE TO VOTE TUESDAY.

Friends of Oleo Bill Anxious for a Decision.

Washington, March 31.—The friends of the oleomargarine bill hope to secure a vote upon that measure on Tuesday of the present week, and as soon as it shall be disposed of the Chinese exclusion bill will be called up. According to the present understanding, Senator Mitchell of Oregon, who was largely instrumental in framing the exclusion bill, will make the first presentation of its merits to the senate. He will be followed by other supporters of the bill, and it is the hope of Senator Penrose, who has charge of the measure, that the senate will be able to conclude its consideration within ten days after it is taken up. There is no pronounced opposition to the bill as a whole, but an effort will be made to amend it in some particulars.

It is expected that the Indian appropriation and the river and harbor bill will be reported during the week. Both are subject to immediate consideration, even to the extent of displacing other bills, but it is not believed that either of them will be used to deprive the Chinese bill of its chance for consideration. The Philippine government bill also will be reported probably today, but its consideration by the senate necessarily will be postponed for some weeks.

The house during the week will be largely occupied with the sundry civil appropriation bill, which will be called up today. Such time as remains will be devoted to the consideration of the senate bill to promote the efficiency of the revenue cutter service and the Chinese exclusion bill, both of which are on special orders, but they do not interfere with revenue or appropriation bills. It is the intention of the leaders not to bring forward the Cuban reciprocity bill until next week.

BLOODY FIGHT IN WYOMING.

Cattle and Sheep Men Fought Over Pasture Lands.

Rock Springs, Wyo., March 31.—In a battle Saturday the range, in the upper Green river country, between cattlemen and sheep men, four men were shot, two perhaps fatally; several others were severely beaten and 1,100 sheep were clubbed or shot to death. Abe and Rowen Hill, brothers, sheep men, were dangerously wounded, and when a courier who brought the news left the scene they were in a critical condition. The Hills shot but did not kill two cattlemen whose names have not been learned, and several sheepherders were beaten by the cattlemen.

The cause of the trouble is a dispute between the cattle and sheep men over a division of the range. The cattlemen have been fighting for years to keep sheep out of the New Fork section of Uintah county. No sooner have they got rid of one band of sheep than another appeared. Dead lines were drawn about a certain tract of land to be used exclusively by cattle, and the sheep men were warned to keep away or take the consequences.

Garfield, in Cleveland. He is a notable figure in Ohio political circles and has served as state senator from [illegible] district.

The White Pine.

The white pine is distinctively a northern tree. The native distribution of the tree was from Newfoundland on the east to Lake Winnipeg on the west and thence to the southern boundaries of Wisconsin, Michigan, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Connecticut. The white pine belt also followed the Appalachian range as far to the south as Georgia. The best growth of the tree was in Maine and the British territory east of the state, along the St. Lawrence river, in New Hampshire, Vermont, northern New York, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and central Pennsylvania.

High Pressure Days.

Men and women alike have to work incessantly with brain and hand to hold their own nowadays. Never were the demands of business, the wants of the family, the requirements of society, more numerous. The first effect of the praiseworthy effort to keep up with all these things is commonly seen in a weakened or debilitated condition of the nervous system, which results in dyspepsia, defective nutrition of both body and brain, and in extreme cases in complete nervous prostration. It is clearly seen that what is needed is what will sustain the system, give vigor and tone to the nerves, and keep the digestive and assimilative functions healthy and active. From personal knowledge, we recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla for this purpose. It acts on all the vital organs, builds up the whole system, and fits men and women for these high pressure days.

Fortunately my employer suggested that I try Foley's Honey and Tar. Its effect was almost miraculous, and I am now cured of the disease. On my recommendation many people have used Foley's Honey and Tar, and always with satisfaction. J. J. Orr.

Dreadful Attack of Whooping Cough

Mrs. Ellen Harl[illegible], of 300 Park Ave. Kansas City, Mo., writes as follows: [illegible] two children had a severe attack of whooping cough, one of them in the paroxysm of coughing would often faint and bleed at the nose. We tried everything we heard of without getting relief. We then called in our family doctor who prescribed Foley's Honey and Tar. With the very first dose they began to improve and we feel that it has saved their lives." Refuse substitutes. J. J. Orr.

A VALUABLE MEDICINE

For Coughs and Colds in Children.

I have not the slightest hesitancy in recommending Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to all who are suffering from coughs or colds," says Chas. M. Cramer, Esq., a well known watch maker, of Colombo, Ceylon. "It has been some two years since the city dispensary first called my attention to this valuable medicine and I have repeatedly used it and it has always been beneficial. It has cured me quickly of all chest colds. It is especially effective for children and seldom takes more than one bottle to cure them of hoarseness. I have persuaded many to try this valuable medicine, and they are all as well pleased as myself over the results." For sale by J. J. Orr.

RAILWAY MAPS.

A Disgruntled Passenger's Comments on the Straight Line Variety.

"Look at that," said an ill natured passenger, pointing to a large map on the wall of the railway station. "Isn't that an abominable fraud?"

"What's the matter with it?" asked his mild companion.

"Look how it is distorted," said the other. "There is a map of a railway system from Chicago to New York. It is made to appear as following a straight line between these two cities, and yet on the map it appears to pass through every large town within 500 miles of that line.

"Just notice that towns like Cincinnati and Cleveland are so misplaced as to appear only a few miles apart, and Nashville, Tenn., is pulled 500 miles from its real location. I wonder they have not transported New Orleans a thousand miles northeast, so as to bring it on the line of their railway fraud.

"Congress ought to take hold of this fake," he continued, "and punish heavily every railroad that issues a distorted map."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Sir Boyle Roche's Bulls.

Sir Boyle Roche was the father of "bulls." It was he that asserted that "the best way to avoid danger is to meet it plump." At another time in conveying a warm invitation to a friend he remarked, "I hope, my lord, if ever you come within a mile of my house that you'll stay there all night."

He may have been the fool of the Grattan parliament, but there was a great deal of native shrewdness hidden away behind all his foolishness. To Curran when the latter once exclaimed in the midst of a debate that he needed aid from no one and could be "guardian of his own honor" Sir Boyle instantly interjected his sarcastic congratulations to the honorable member on his possession of a sinecure. But possibly the gem of his rhetoric was the picture which he conjured up on one occasion to bring home to his hearers the excesses of the French revolutionary mob:

"Here perhaps, sir, the murderous marshal law men (Marseilleise) would break in, cut us to mincemeat and throw our bleeding heads on that table to stare us in the face."—London Express.

Foods to Avoid.

It is well to refuse the sausage brought to your breakfast table if it is stale and to refrain from using the cream in your coffee if it is the least bit sour. Otherwise you run the risk of becoming blind.

Some foods, it is said, are most injurious to the sight. "A case was brought under the notice of an eye specialist," says The Dioptic Review, "in which the eyes of a whole family were affected by eating rabbit pie. In each instance the patient had become afflicted with a peculiar defect of vision that is technically known as 'failure of accommodation.' Stale sausage and sour cream cause a weakening of the sight known as 'amblobia.' Blindness resulting from eating tainted fish has been found almost impossible to cure, and quinine is often responsible for some persons' half blind condition. This drug affects the optic nerve in a manner that sometimes ends in blindness." It might be added that alcohol occasionally makes people "blind."

Water and the Kidneys.

As the waste in animal food in those who lead indolent lives is carried off by the kidneys it is very desirable that they should be kept well flushed with plenty of water, for pure water is to the kidneys what fresh air is to the lungs, and taken in the early morning, preferably as hot as it can be sipped, it washes away the unhealthy secretions that have accumulated in the stomach during the night and stimulates it to healthy action, and then, passing on through the system till it reaches the kidneys, carries away by their aid the uric acid, gout poison and other impurities that should have no fixed habitation in the body at all [illegible] would not have if the [illegible] were properly dieted fo[illegible] [illegible] two or three weeks, each year.

A Very Old English Cloth.

Fustian is a species of cotton cloth much used by the Normans, particularly by the clergy, and appropriated to some orders for their cashubles. The Cistercians were forbidden to wear them made of any material but linen or fustian. A stronger description was first manufactured in England at Norwich, temp. Edward VI.

It was much used for doublets and jackets in the fifteenth century, at which time it appears to have been imported from Italy. "Fustians of Naples" are named in a petition to parliament, from the manufacturers of Norwich in 1554. The name was corrupted in England into "futianapes" and "fustian and apes"—i. e., "fustian a Naples."—Notes and Queries.

Heidelberg Castle.

The castle of Heidelberg is the largest in Germany. It stands 330 feet above the Neckar river and was occupied as a castle as early as A. D. 1294. In a cellar in one corner of the ruins is the famous "tun" or monster cask, capable of holding 49,000 gallons. This was for the storage of wine used by the nobility who dwelt in this castle.

His Idea of Success.

"What is your idea of success?"

"Success," answered the man who has realized a few ambitions, "is merely the attainment of a condition which causes people who knew you years ago to look at you and smile and say, 'A fool for luck!'"—Washington Star.

Reputation is a bubble hard to blow out, but easily burst.—Chicago News.

Children's Play In Germany.

It is a common belief in south Germany that if children play soldiers very often in the street there is a war coming, and if they play "funeral" an epidemic will come over the land, and many deaths will result. The relator of this tells that, when a boy, he with others played "funeral" in front of the house of an old miser in his native town in Germany. The miser became much excited and exclaimed, "I will not die yet!" and made complaint to the mayor that the boys should be arrested and punished.

A Fast Growing Vine.

The Kudzu vine is probably the most rapid growing plant in the world. It belongs to the bean family. The leaves look something like a lima bean and was once called Dolichos japonicus. It will grow easily sixty feet in three months. It was introduced into America by the Japanese during the Centennial exhibition. It is said that in its own country it has flowers like bunches of wistaria. For some reason American summers do not seem long enough for it. It rarely blooms.

A MYSTERY SOLVED

[Original.]

Whittemore first saw her at the opera. It was her sweet face that attracted him, a face that bespoke some great sorrow. She kept her eyes turned upon the stage, but he noticed that it was where there was acting rather than music. All those in the box with her were chatting during the opera, while she, resting her cheek on her hand and her arm on the rail, her figure partly covered by a curtain, seemed to be absorbed by her own dreams. The opera was "Faust." During the scene where Mephistopheles and the nurse are walking in the garden and Faust and Marguerite are singing their love she turned her eyes away, and they fell on Whittemore in the parquet, his head turned toward her, his eyes fixed intensely on hers. She blushed slightly and looked again at the figures on the stage.

When the opera was ended and all rose to go, Whittemore was watching her box. An elderly man put a wrap around her shoulders, and the others of the party were also getting ready to leave. Whittemore watched to see some of them speak to her; but, though they were chatting with each other, no one said a word to her. Then they all went out, and it seemed as if the electric lights had been turned off.

Winter passed into summer, and Whittemore went to the seashore. The morning after his arrival at bathing time he strolled down to the beach. There, sitting under a sun umbrella, was the girl he had seen at the opera. She was peering far out where the water and the sky met, and here and there a glint of sunshine on the horizon bespoke a sail. She was alone. Whittemore would have given worlds for some one to take him to her and introduce him, but he knew no one there. He had come to be alone and for rest. He waited, expecting that some of her friends would join her, but they did not, and after the bathing she arose and went away. As she passed him she started. Evidently she remembered him.

The next morning he was at the beach early, watching for her. When she came, it was with a party of girls and an elderly man, all in bathing suits. What symmetry! Her hair, instead of being coiled under one of those unbecoming bathing caps, was streaming down her back, as it is sometimes worn by very young girls while bathing. All the party save her were talking and laughing. She alone was quiet. Surely she must have some sorrow.

The beach was shelving, and few dared venture beyond the breakers. The man of the party took the fair one by the hand and led her beyond their depth. Suddenly Whittemore saw him struggling in the water. The fair one had gone under. With all his clothes on Whittemore plunged in and brought her out.

They stood on the beach, Whittemore presenting a poor appearance in his dripping clothes. The fair one looked at him with an expression so distressed that he thought she regretted that he had saved her. Then without a word of thanks she turned and ran away to the bathing house. The man who had taken her beyond her depth had been dragged out of the water, and Whittemore saw him coming toward him. Whittemore, indignant, turned his back upon him and walked away. The next evening he saw the fair one being driven toward the railroad station. As she passed him she regarded him with the same pained glance.

Winter came again, and Whittemore, who had detested society for its hollowness, plunged into the gay world, hoping that he might meet the girl who had absorbed his whole being. He appeared at teas, receptions, balls; he went to the opera, to concerts, everywhere where music was to be heard. At last, at a musical entertainment at the home of one of his most intimate friends, he saw her, but where? Sitting alone in a recess, so immersed behind curtains as almost to be indistinguishable! Although he was looking for her, when he found her he was taken completely aback. He stood still and trembled.

"Pardon me," he said. "I am permitted to speak to you here under our mutual friend's roof, but I will not avail myself of the privilege. Remain here for a few minutes, and I will bring him to introduce me."

Without waiting for her consent he hurried away, found the host and brought him to the recess.

It was empty.

In vain he dragged the man through the rooms looking for her. She was not in any of the rooms below. They waited in the hall, and presently she came down, followed by her maid.

"Ah!" said the host. "Now I understand. That is Clara Van Cleve, an orphan. She is a deaf mute."

Whittemore went home in great distress. He was desperately in love, but he was a practical man and considered what it would be to be tied to one upon whom there was such a blight. For a week he suffered torture, then made up his mind that to go on through life suffering without her would be worse than suffering with her. Then he spent some time studying the deaf mute sign language. This mastered, without calling in any one as a go between, he wrote to her, intimating that he knew of her misfortune and begging to be permitted to share it with her. When the two met the next evening at her home, Whittemore astonished her by addressing her by her own method of communication. They soon became engaged, and when married Whittemore found, to his surprise, that her misfortune only drew them closer together and made their married life the happier.

Lottery Methods.

An English writer declares that financial "morality, imperfect as it is in our day, is superior to that of the epoch that came to an end in 1826 with the abolition of lotteries. Take a single instance. Lord North in 1779, while the American war of independence was in progress, issued 60,000 lottery tickets, 20,000 of which were given as bribes to members of parliament."

How To Gain Flesh

Persons have been known to gain a pound a day by taking an ounce of SCOTT'S EMULSION. It is strange, but it often happens.

Somehow the ounce produces the pound; it seems to start the digestive machinery going properly, so that the patient is able to digest and absorb his ordinary food, which he could not do before, and that is the way the gain is made.

ROUND ABOUT US.

Samuel Thompson, charged with brutal treatment of his 12 year old daughter at Deerfield, was last Saturday bound over to the circuit court by Justice Auchampaugh, and failing to give $500 bail, is in jail awaiting trial.—Adrian Press.

Washtenaw county boasts of a tramp 97 years old, who follows his calling, as diligently as James O'Donnell seeks gubernatorial honors, or William Judson freezes to an office. A Jackson county man notified the health department at Lansing that his bees had the hives, and asked what he must do in the matter. Dr. Baker at once wrote out three pages of statistics, two of remedies, and one of instructions gave an assistant a comb, and had the assistant proceed to the bee farm at state expense, with orders to destroy the bees, unless they had been vaccinated.—Adrian Press.

John S. Walter, of LaSalle township, was arrested Sunday afternoon by Sheriff Hause charged with threatening to kill his father, Joseph Walter. It is allege that the young man made the threat during an altercation at the home of his father Sunday morning. When arrested Walter had a loaded revolver in his possession. He was arraigned before Justice Noble Monday morning, and on pleading not guilty was remanded for examination Monday next. Walter's bail was fixed at $500 which he failed to furnish.—Monroe Democrat.

In the Sunday Detroit News-Tribune the story of how a Lenawee county woman organized a pioneer rural route is told. The lady referred to is Mrs. Zetta A. Underwood, of Hudson, and the article written by herself, tells of her efforts in getting the first rural route near that city. She began her labor in 1899 and circulated petitions among the farmers in furthering the project. Notwithstanding the scheme they were at first loth to sign. In corresponding with the congressmen of the second and third districts, she met great discouragement, as they did not think petitions would be recognized. By persistent work, however, the route was granted. If one doubts the benefits derived, a glance at the changed conditions of the farmer in relation with the outside world should rapidly decide in the affirmative.—Adrian Times.

RECIPROCITY;

A Social Evening Given By

THE MONDAY CLUB

At the Universalist Church Last Evening.

The Monday club gave a Reciprocity evening at their rooms at the Universalist church last evening in which the other literary clubs of the town were invited to take part. The church was prettily decorated with flowers and ferns for the occasion, and the program was opened by a selection given by the male quartet, Dickinson, Maddox, Abrams and Slater. The president of the Monday club, Mrs. T. C. Harris, made a few introductory remarks in which she said:

"It is my privilege this evening in behalf of the ladies of the Monday club to extend greeting and welcome, to our guests, the members of the other study clubs of Tecumseh, as well as to thank them for their cordial acceptance of our invitation to join with us in a reciprocity meeting.

This "reciprocity" is something of which we hear much these days, and it means more to club workers than would appear at first thought. One of our brilliant young American authors has said, "The great genius of the American lies in his adapability. He not only adapts himself to times and conditions, but he adapts times and conditions to his wants and needs." Perhaps this is nowhere better proven than among the club women of our country, along this line of reciprocity. While our brothers and law-makers in Congress are struggling to adapt reciprocity to the needs of our goverment, the club women have been quick to see its advantages in their lines of work and equally quick to adapt it to their needs and use, so that now reciprocity or it synonym, cooperation, is the watch-word of the club women of America. Michigan women have not been laggards in this line by any means and in many places in our state "Reciprocity Days" are a regular feature of club work.

Our coming here to-night is the first meeting of the kind for Tecumseh, but there are more than a few of us who are daring enough to hope that the experiment will be successful enough to lead to more in the future."

The Research Circle was represented by Miss Sena Hosmer in a paper written by Mrs. E. B. Wood on Household Economics," Miss Hosmer prefacing the reading with a brief resume of the Research work for the year. The Wit and Wisdom Club were to have been represented by their president, Mrs. Rector, who was unable to be present. The Euterpean Fraternity chose Miss Helen Anderson for their representative and she gave a sketch of the work and mission of the Euterpeans which was an appeal for the cultivation of the esthetic in our lives. Miss Haight represented the Monday Club in a paper which made a plea for the union of club forces for the benefit of the town and the clubs.

After the program refreshments were served and a social hour enjoyed by the club and their guests which it is to be hoped will be only one of many such reciprocity evenings.

THE CHURCHES.

Elaborately Celebrate the Great Festival of

EASTER

Unusually Beautiful Music Marked Each Service.

Easter day, the day of resurrection, the glorious day, that brings to our mind the rising of Christ from the dead, is also the day by which we are reminded of his coming again, when all that sleep in him shall rise from the dead and the sorrowing ones, watching by the side of the graves of dear departed, may lift their voices in fervent hallelujahs.

Bethlehem marks the dawn of christian hope, the triumphal entry into Jerusalem, its noon-day; Gethsemane, its glooming, and Calvary, its black and gloomy night.

Easter marks the end of the forty days of prayer and fasting, for which the christian people give vent to their joy and gladness in praises to their Creator.

The services at the Episcopal church were two, an early service at 6:00 a. m., after which Holy Communion was held. The subject of the pastor's Easter sermon was "He is not here, He is risen." The church was beautifully decorated, about the alter were large, beautiful Easter lillies, while upon a background of pure white, were hung large bunches of myrtle, luxuriant house plants were gracefully placed about in front of the pulpit. The vested choir furnished special music for both services.

At the Universalist church the pastor's Easter sermon was "Life and Immortality Brought to Light." Service at this church was held at 2:30 p. m. The decorations were in good harmony with the joyful festival, vocal selections were furnished by Miss Anna McClure

Easter services at the Presbyterian church began at six o'clock a. m., this service was conducted by the P. S. C. E. At 10 o'clock a. m. the communion service was held. The church was attractively decorated with potted plants, flowers and festoons of white. Mrs. Maggie Dickinson, Mrs. W. S. Dickinson and Miss Sena Kelley were received into church membership upon confession of faith, and Mrs. W. E. Jones and Mrs. Parker by letter.

A beautiful part of the service was the baptism of seven children: Clare, Zorah and Zielah, children of Mrs. Maggie Dickinson; Helen and Cairns, children of Mr. and Mrs F. A. Shepard; Muriel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Halliday; and Stanley, son of Rev. and Mrs. W. F. Jones. A duet sung by Miss Anna McClure and W. S. Dickinson was a pleasing feature of the musical program.

The five o'clock service was conducted by the pupils of the Sunday school. An interesting program was presented, consisting of readings, songs and recitations, followed by a brief address by the pastor.

During the Sunday school hours in the morning, Dr. Frost, on behalf of the teachers and pupils of the Sunday school, presented a handsome clock and set of silver teaspoons to Supt. and Mrs F. A. Shepard, who leave this week for their new home in Kalamazoo.

The Easter exercises at the M. E. church were presented by the Sunday school, each pupil putting forth his best endeavor to do his best. The church was beautifully decorated, potted plants being the cheif decorations, the following program was given:

Invocation—Rev. Seelye.
Responsive Reading.
Chorus, O Swing the Gates Wide Open—Sunday School.
Exercise—Miss Howell's class.
Chorus, The Easter Song—Sunday School.
Address of Welcome by the Pastor.
Song, Lily Bell—Primary Department
Chorus, Victory—Sunday School.
Exercise—Miss Haven's class.
Song, Easter Day—Primary Department.
Recitation—Harry Chiverall.
Song, Easter Message—Miss Simmons' class.
Recitation—Eolah Brown.
Vocal Solo, He Liveth—Miss Metta McKinney.
Recitation—Glenn Lanning.
Song—Bessie Poole.
Recitation—Dale Hodges.
Chorus, Awake—Sunday School.
Recitation—Fred Bice.

There were three services in the Baptist church Easter, a sunrise prayer meeting at 6 o'clock, a regular service at 10 a. m., the pastor taking as his subject "The Resurrection." The evening service was especially attractive, there being special music furnished by a chorus of twenty voices. The church was beautifully decorated. A large white cross stood out in appealing splendor, around the base large clusters of flowers were tastefully arranged, potted plants and large flowing palms in their green luxuriance made a pleasing contrast for the other decorations.

Being urged to try Dr King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds, I found quick relief, and for the last ten days have felt better than for two years." The Myrtle—Harder Stock Co.

The Flint Globe has this to say of the Myrtle—Harder opening in part:

The most important part of the entertainment is the great biograph. The moving pictures are the best of their kind, and the most extensive and beautiful ever shown in Flint. Mr. Will Harrison, in the illustrations of popular songs, is possessed of a good tenor voice and Mr W. G. Rozell, the tramp musician, introduces some new musical specialties that are exceedingly clever. Altogether the entire vaudeville performance is strong in merif. The house was fairly well filled last night, and when the company have gone abroad, undoubtedly the house will be filled.

Billed for Sutton's opera house Friday evening of this week.

Smith—Graves.

A very pretty home wedding took place at the residence of Mrs. M. Addie Graves, Ridgeway, March 27 at 12 o'clock, the contracting parties being her youngest daughter, Miss Olive J., and Mr. C. Bert Smith. The bridal party, headed by ten of the bride's lady friends, filed into the spacious parlors, to the strains of Mendelssohns wedding march, played by Mrs. M. W. Covert, Rev. E. G. Palmer, of Detroit, pronounced the solemn words that united two happy hearts for life.

After congratulations were offered, a sumptuous repast was served by the young ladies, Mrs. J. Campbell, of Tecumseh, catered. The bride was gowned in white French lawn and wore orange blossoms. The presents were numerous and useful.

The newly married couple left at 3:50 p. m. for Edgerton, O., for a short visit with relatives. On their return they will reside with the bride's mother and will be at home to their friends after April 3rd.

I WAS SO NERVOUS

that I could not sleep, had dizzy spells. No appetite. Would start and

and I would then feel so weak. A friend advised me to take

KINYON'S CELERY NERVINE

which I did, and from the very first dose I began to feel better and

IN A SHORT TIME I FELT AS WELL AS I EVER DID

That is what Mrs. M. Bronson, of 134 Tutt St., South Bend, Ind., writes. This is one of the many cases that come to our daily notice. If you are nervous and cannot sleep. If you feel irritable at times and have dizzy spells and dull pains in back of neck and down the spine, then you can get relief from the trouble by using this great remedy,

B. J. PULVER & CO.

A Sidewalk Prescription.

The busy doctor was hurrying down the street when he was stopped by a man noted for his ability to get "sidewalk" advice.

"I am thoroughly worn out and sick and tired. What ought I to take?" asked the man.

Some Remarkable Beliefs.

There are naturalists in this day and age who believe that horsehairs will turn to living snakes, that toads will live for thousands of years in the cavity of a rock without food or water, that the barnacle goose was developed from the shellfish of that name and that the bird called sora is a species of winged frog.

A Killer.

Esther—I shouldn't wonder. I had to talk with him last evening, and I really thought I should die, he wearied me so.—Boston Transcript.

COULD NOT SLEEP.

No rest at night, nervous, worried tired all the time, the medicine that never fails.

Mr. E. Lockwood of Tecumseh, Mich. says: "For a number of years past I have been troubled with nervousness in a severe form and as a result I was sleepless and bothered with dizzy speels. I got a box of Dr. W. A. Chase's Nerve Pills at Chas. A. Wright's drug store and after using the pills I am pleased to say my nerves are steadied, I sleep better and the dizzy spells are gone. I consider the pills a splendid nerve medicine."

She Won the Wager.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 29.—Albert Fischer of West Toledo, with his pretty wife, strolled into town yesterday and later started home by train. They had walked all the way to this city from Toledo to win a house and lot wager. The couple were married last December and went to live with Mr. Fischer's rich uncle. The bride was enthusiastic on the physical culture question and her uncle laughed at her. One day the uncle said he would give her a house and lot if she would walk to Grand Rapids, and she promptly took him up, and, for fear he might change his mind, started the next day. Her husband would not let her go alone, and so he came along with her. They were about a week on the road and visited friends en route.

Foley's Honey and Tar contains no opiates, and will not constipate like nearly all other cough medicines. Refuse substitutes. J. J. Orr.

In a Heap of Trouble.

Mt. Clemens, Mich., March 29.—When Mrs. Milton Hunt, a widow residing on Grand avenue, returned Friday from a visit in the country, she found that her rooms had been entered, all furniture removed and thrown promiscuously into a shed in the rear of the house, and another family in possession of her former quarters. She made immediate complaint, claiming that she had $45 stowed away in her bed. This could not be found. About noon, shortly after her visit to the house, neighbors discovered that it was on fire. The prompt action of the department saved it, and it was discovered that someone had made a deliberate attempt to set fire to it. Mrs. Hunt now wants the owner of the house arrested, and he is desirous of making a complaint against her for arson.

Tired Out

"I was very poorly and could hardly get about the house. I was tired out all the time. Then I tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and it only took two bottles to make me feel perfectly well."—Mrs. N. S. Swinney, Princeton, Mo.

Tired when you go to bed, tired when you get up, tired all the time. Why? Your blood is impure, that's the reason. You are living on the border line of nerve exhaustion. Take Ayer's Sarsaparilla and be quickly cured. $1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

Ask your doctor what he thinks of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. He knows all about this grand old family medicine. Follow his advice and we will be satisfied.

Shoddy Boots.

Boots and shoes in England have been subject to a very considerable fall in prices of late years. Partly this is owing to the use of machinery, partly to the employment of lads where men used to do the work, partly to the use of what was formerly waste material and partly to sheer dodgery and trickery. Men's lace boots are now to be bought for 2s. 11d. They are made of leather, too, and to look at them you might think it genuine enough.

The truth is, however, the uppers are made of what are known as "center splits," and the soles are an artificial compound of leather waste. The "center splits" are very ingenious forms of shoddy. Good, honest skins are cunningly split into three thicknesses. The center sheet is soft and spongy and has no natural grain upon it. But this defect in its appearance is supplied by a process of printing which produces a surface "grain" and makes it, to the inexperienced eye, just like ordinary leather. It is then made up into boots that give every promise of good service, a promise to the eye, to parody Macbeth—pretty certainly destined to be broken to the hope.—Chambers' Journal.

Wild Dogs Slaughter Deer.

Menominee, Mich., March 29.—Syrenus Ponneil cf Greenland township says that dogs are out almost continually chasing and killing deer, and that he can show the carcasses of two deer lying close together which were killed by them, making four victims from this source to his personal knowledge.

Rain Didn't Effect Attendance.

Ann Arbor, Mich., March 29.—Friday's sessions of the five allied educational conventions of Michigan societies were very well attended, in spite of the drizzling rain. The Michigan Schoolmasters' club and the classical conference each met in general session; the Academy of Science met in sections, and after 10:30 o'clock held one general session; the Michigan section of the American Chemical society met all day, yesterday being the only day of their convention. The stenographers and commercial teachers' convention closed its session last night.

Oakland Farm House Burned.

Pontiac, Mich., March 29.—The house and barn belonging to Frank Dewey, a short way from Pontiac, was completely destroyed by fire Thursday night. As the cistern was in the burning house, no water could be secured, and the many farmers who had collected had to stand by and see the house and barn, which had also caught fire, completely destroyed.

Michigan Senators Censured.

Lansing, Mich., March 29.—The executive committee of the State Grange has adopted resolutions censuring the Michigan senators for their vote on the ship subsidy bill; also urging the adoption of the bill calling for the election of senators by direct vote of the people, and urging the Michigan senators to support the amendment.

Crooked Doings of an Ex-Convict.

Jackson, Mich., March 31.—Olwen, the little daughter of ex-Ald. Humphrey Lewis, while returning from Sunday school yesterday, was accosted by Charles Mallet, an ex-convict. She went with him, and when they reached an open box car Mallett helped the little girl into the car. In the meantime a brother of the little girl, becoming concerned at her delay in arriving home, started to search for her and found her in a corner of the car sobbing bitterly. The police have Mallet locked up. He has served two terms—one of three and a half years for larceny and another of five years for criminal assault.

COLD AND HUNGER

Passengers in a Stranded Train Suffered Five Days.

CAUGHT IN A BLIZZARD

St. Paul, April 3.—Passengers arriving Monday on a Great Northern train due last Friday, tell of being snowbound for five days and five nights on the prairies of North Dakota, in the midst of the worst blizzard the northwest has seen in many years, with only food enough for two frugal meals a day, and with such a small amount of fuel that the ladies had to wrap themselves in blankets and the men to wear their overcoats day and night to keep from freezing. The train was completely lost to the world. Late Tuesday afternoon it picked its precarious way out of Williston, in the hope of being able to reach Minot, some 14 miles to the east, before night. Almost midway, at a little stopping place called Ray, where there is only a siding, a water tank and a coal shed, the train was stalled. The engineer thought he could run the engine back to Williston and get aid, and, taking the conductor with him, started on the trip. The lone engine was stuck in a drift in a cut a short distance out of the town and had to be abandoned. This left the train of eight coaches and about 250 passengers alone on the siding, and with all communication cut off. Then began the long siege, during which the cold had to be borne and hunger stifled. There was much suffering.

There was an incipient riot on the first day over the food supply.

Monday evening Prof. Colegrove of the University of Washington, who had been despondent and morose, attempted suicide by cutting his throat with a razor. There was a physician on the train, but he had no facilities for performing the necessary operation. A telegraph instrument was at last found and a young electrician faced the blizzard and tapped one of the wires. He notified the operators at both Minot and Williston of what had occurred. From each place a snow plow was started in front of an engine bearing a surgeon. The one from Minot, after a hard night's work, reached the siding early the following morning, and the injured man was removed on the first train to St. Paul.

The almost famished passengers, who had suffered from cold and exposure, were given food and warm berths in the first train pushed through the drifts.

Three Prisoners Gained Freedom.

Chicago, April 3.—Three prisoners under guard at Fort Sheridan escaped from their sentries yesterday and gained freedom under exciting circumstances. One prisoner was shot at by a crack marksman recently returned from the Philippines, and, it is said, was badly wounded. Another boarded a passing freight train going toward Chicago, and was not missed for 15 minutes. The third escaped with his life only because the Winchester which the sentry snapped at him missed fire. M. S. Whidden, a Kentuckian, sentenced to nine months in the guard house for desertion, is the man supposed to be wounded.

Red Cross Delegates.

Davenport, Ia., April 3.—Information has been received here of the appointment of Rear Admiral W. K. Van Reipen, Dr. Nicholas Senn of Chicago; B. F. Tillinghast, editor of the Devenport Democrat; Mrs. J. Ellen Foster and Miss Clara Barton as the American delegates to the seventh international conference of Red Cross, to be held in St. Petersburg, Russia, May 16-29. Mr. Tillinghast was chairman of Iowa committee which dispatched the ship Tynehead with 7,000,000 pounds of corn and flour for the relief of Russian famine sufferers in 1891.

Albanian Chief in Turkey.

London, April 3.—The Vienna correspondent of the Ceneral News cables that the Neue Freie Presse of that city publishes a startling report, current in Belgrade, to the effect that the famour Albanian chief, Issa Baljetinac, with 900 followers, has crossed the Turkish frontier into the sub-province of Novibazar, where he is terrorizing the Turkish populace and threatening a general massacre. The correspondent says the report lacks confirmation.

National Soldiers' Home Officers.

Washington, April 3.—At a meeting of the board of managers of the national soldiers' homes Wednesday the following officers were elected: President, Gen. M. T. McMahon of New York; first vice-president, Gen. Pearson of Pittsburg; second vice-president, Col. John L. Mitchell of Wisconsin; secretary, Col. George W. Steele of Indiana. The members of the board called at the White house and paid their respects to the president.

A Sensation in Toledo.

Toledo, April 3.—Judge Kinkade of the common pleas bench created a sensation throughout the city Wednesday by announcing the names of a grand jury composed of prominent business men of the city. He instructed them to investigate various city boards and officials and also to investigate the charges of jury-bribing which have been made frequently of late. He said the jury could have 30 days if it desired.

Muskegon Boy Falls Into a Moving Fly-Wheel.

TRAIN KILLS VASSAR MAN

Farmer Near Standish Dies of Injuries Received in a Murderous Assault on His Person by an Enraged Pole.

Muskegon, Mich., April 3.—Sixteen-year-old Pat McDonald, a scrap boy at the American Tinplate Co.'s plant, was horribly mangled by being caught in the fly-wheel of the shear machine at the plant about 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoonn. The cause of the accident is unknown.

The first person to see that anything was wrong was McDonald's companion on the scrap heap. He was horrified to see the body of his friend being whirled on the rim of the big wheel at an awful speed. Suddenly one of the arms flew off and the body was hurled to the floor an almost unrecognizable mass.

The head was crushed and most of the clothing was torn from the body. The victim died a few minutes afterwards.

It is supposed that some portion of McDonald's clothing became caught in the huge fly-wheel.

Vassar, Mich., April 3.—Lewis Brewster, aged 58, who lives three miles from Vassar, while walking on the P. M. R. R. track on his way home from Vassar, was struck and killed by a passenger train at Lambert's crossing, two miles from here. He was a veteran and leaves a widow and one daughter.

Standish, Mich., April 3.—Andrew W. Payne, a well-known farmer, aged 60 years, was killed by John Hessler, a Polander, at Bentley, just west of here, Tuesday night in an altercation over an account.

Hessler, who is a young man, pounded the old man over the head with a club. Payne was found a short time after, unconscious, on a manure heap near a barn on Hessler's place. He died yesterday.

Hessler remarked to a neighbor after committing the deed, that he had "fixed the old man."

The sheriffs of Bay and Arenac counties are after the Polander.

A REPLY TO ROSE.

Judge Cheever Shatters the Ann Arbor Saloonist's Ideals.

Ann Arbor, Mich., April 3.—Judge Noah Cheever replied to "Doc" Rose before the University of Michigan prohibitionists Wednesday afternoon. "Doc," the student-supported saloonkeeper, gave the saloonist's side of the liquor question and alleged that his saloon was the ideal place of the city. The climax was as unexpected as it was shattering to "Doc's" fine picture of respectable booze emporium.

"The students," declared the judge, "do not drink merely moderately. They are liable to go to excess. They keep ruinously late hours. They get drunk, and I know of one case where four students, prominent fraternity men—I am not going to mention any names—who recently became so dead drunk that they had to be sent home in a livery cab."

Liveryman Walker was an attentive auditor. He jumped to his feet when the judge was through, and, while the audience listened breathlessly, said: "I was the liveryman who was called at an early morning hour to take those four boys home. The saloon was 'Doc' Rose's, and the man who paid for the cab was 'Doc' Rose."

Acid in Detroit Whisky.

Jackson, Mich., April 3.—James Chansley and J. Kline were taken off a Detroit train here and conveyed to the hospital Tuesday night, their mouths being badly burned from drinking whisky supposed to have been drugged. Kline left the hospital today, but Chansley, who drank a quantity of the stuff, is in a serious condition. The men claim to have purchased the whisky near the Michigan Central depot at Detroit. The burns appear to be the effects of carbolic acid.

Thought the Crime Forgotten.

Ithaca, Mich., April 3.—Fay Wiles, an alleged member of the notorious Kibby Hollow gang and an associate of James Hazzard, recently convicted of burglary, has been arrested on the charge of burglary. The warrant upon which this arrest was made was issued in 1900, at which time Wiles left the county secretly. Thinking that the affair had blown over, he recently returned.

German Dolls.

It takes eighty men to make a German doll. Each man makes a small portion of the doll, but it is the same bit all the time, and 1,000 dozen dolls can be made in a day in some of the big factories. After the men finish the body portion of the doll the women's work begins. They paint, dress the dolls and pack them for the market.

How She Knew.

Old Lady—How nice! I always did like "Home, Sweet Home."

Young Lady (with a start)—"Home, Sweet Home?"

Old Lady—Yes. Minnie plays it. I can always tell it when she crosses her hands.

His Start.

Ascum—What's that boy of yours doing now?

Poppers—He's got a job in the bank, and he's going to be president of that bank some day.

Ascum—Bright, eh?

Poppers—Well, sir, he can sign his name so nobody on earth can make it out.

THREE OTHER APPOINTMENTS

Colonels Derussy, Burt and Sheridan Appointed Brigadier-Generals—Short Sketch of the Career of Each Man.

Washington, April 3.—The president Wednesday appointed Brig.-Gen. R. P. Hughes a major-general and Col. Isaac D. De Russy, Col. Andrew S. Burt and Col. M. V. Sheridan to be brigadier-generals in the regular army, to fill existing vacancies caused by retirements.

Brig.-Gen. R. P. Hughes entered the military service as a private of the Twelfth Pennsylvania volunteer infantry April 25, 1861. He rose during the civil war to be lieutenant-colonel, and in 1866 entered the regular army as a captain. He was appointed a brigadier-general of volunteers at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and a brigadier-general in the regular army on Feb. 5, 1901, when the army was reorganized. He served as provost marshal of Manila and subsequently commanded the department of the Visayas.

Col. Andrew Burt was born in Ohio and entered the volunteer service as a sergeant in the Sixth Ohio infantry in April, 1861. He was appointed a lieutenant in the regular army on May 14, 1861, and rose through all the grades to be the second ranking colonel in the line of the army. He was appointed a brigadier-general of vounteers May 4, 1898, and commanded the first brigade, second division, Seventh army corps, during the war with Spain. After his discharge as brigadier-general of volunteers he accompanied his regiment to the Philippine islands, where he has since been on duty.

Col. Isaac D. Derussy was born in Virginia and appointed from New York as a second lieutenant in the First infantry April 26, 1861, and has followed the fortunes of the regular army, rising through the grades to be senior colonel in the line of the army. He served throughout the civil war with the regulars. At the outbreak of the war with Spain he accompanied his regiment to Porto Rico, where he remained until December, 1900. He went to the Philippines in April, 1901, and is at present on duty in those islands. He has served continually in the regular army for more than 40 years.

Col. M. V. Sheridan was born in Ohio and entered the volunteer service as a second lieutenant of the Second Missouri infantry Sept. 2, 1863. He was appointed to the regular service in February, 1866. He was brevetted for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Opequeon and at the battle of Fishers Hill. He served as brigadier-general of volunteers in the war with Spain. In the civil war he had an unusually active battle record, having served in a great number of fights. He also participated in a number of Indian campaigns. He served as adjutant-general at Camp Thomas, Chickamauga park, during the organization and equipment of the 75,000 volunteers in the war with Spain, and also participated in the Porto Rico campaign. Upon being relieved from Porto Rico he was sent to command the department of the lakes at Chicago.

SAD DOUBLE TRAGEDY.

Takes Place in a Mecosta County Country Home.

Morley, Mich., April 3.—One of the most shocking tragedies ever recorded in Mecosta county took place Wednesday morning near Borland settlement, a flag station on the G. R. & I., a few miles north of here. Eugene Richards, a well-to-do farmer, shot and instantly killed his wife, as she lay ill in bed, and then killed himself. He is thought to have been temporarily insane.

Mrs. Richards had been sick for some time, and his necessary care for her and anxiety concerning her condition probably unbalanced his mind. Shortly after 6 o'clock in the morning Richards went to the home of a neighbor, W. J. McEwan, and told him of a presentiment that both he and his wife would die that day. His actions were strange and immediately after he left to return home the McEwan family telephoned to this place for a physician.

The tragedy was discovered by Edward Andrews, who was employed by Richardson on the adjoining farm. A girl employed to care for the sick woman, while on her way to Richard's home, heard two gunshots and returned to where Andrews was at work, saying that she was afraid to go to the house. Andrews went to investigate, and on entering the bedroom found Mrs. Richards lying in bed with an ugly hole in her breast, and Richards himself kneeling at the bedside. A touch showed that he was dead also, shot in the breast.

Fill the New Page With Good.

The improvement to come in any life from the "turning of a new leaf" is not to be based upon the turning of the leaf so much as upon the constant and resolute filling of the new page by dint of unremitting and often strenuous effort. An evil habit is not changed in a moment, but is supplanted by the good which is cultivated into a habit.—Nashville Banner.

STILL AT OLEO BILL.

Arguments Presented Pro and Con—Will Be Voted Thursday.

Washington, April 2.—An agreement was reached by the senate Tuesday to vote on the pending oleomargarine bill before adjournment next Thursday.

Debate on the measure was continued throughout the session. Mr. Heitfeld of Idaho opposed the bill because he believed that it proposed to drive the oleomargarine industry to the wall. He strongly advocated the adoption of the substitute offered, as he said, it would eliminate the possibility of fraud as certainly as the pending measure would, and would do no injustice to anybody.

Mr. Gallinger of New Hampshire advocated the bill because it was a protest against fraud and against an industry "which depended for its success upon duplicity and dishonesty."

Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin made an extended legal and constitutional argument in support of the measure. He said such a tax as it imposed, in his opinion, was in the interest of the whole people.

Mr. Bailey of Texas began an argument in opposition to the bill, but had not concluded when the senate adjourned.

The house Tuesday made rapid progress with the sundry civil appropriation bill, completing 93 of the 139 pages of the bill. Efforts to amend the bill were successfully resisted as a rule by Mr. Cannon, the chairman of the appropriations committee, who was personally in charge of the measure. The proceedings were without incident.

AUTHOR OF "BEN BOLT" DEAD.

Dr. Thomas Dunn English Passes Away at Newark, N. J.

Newark, N. J., April 2.—Dr. Thomas Dunn English died early Tuesday.

Thomas Dunn English was best known as the author of the old song, "Ben Bolt," and last year celebrated the eighty-second anniversary of his birth, receiving the congratulations of numerous friends in all parts of the country.

The aged poet was born in Philadelphia. He was a descendant of an Irish ancestor who settled on a grant from William Penn in 1683. Mr. English took an active part in the politics of the early part of the last century. He wrote the famous song "Ben Bolt" in 1843, and it was soon sung in every country where the English language prevailed. Its author afterward became a successful playwright, a good poet and a lecturer of ability.

Dr. English was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania as a doctor of medicine in 1839. Later he studied law and was admitted to the Philadelphia bar. He engaged in journalism in New York from 1844 to 1859, when he came to Newark to practice medicine. He was a member of the New Jersey legislature in 1863-64. He served two terms in congress from a New Jersey district.

High Pressure Days.

Men and women alike have to work incessantly with brain and hand to hold their own nowadays. Never were the demands of business, the wants of the family, the requirements of society, more numerous. The first effect of the praiseworthy effort to keep up with all these things is commonly seen in a weakened or debilitated condition of the nervous system, which results in dyspepsia, defective nutrition of both body and brain, and in extreme cases in complete nervous prostration. It is clearly seen that what is needed is what will sustain the system, give vigor and tone to the nerves, and keep the digestive and assimilative functions healthy and active. From personal knowledge, we recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla for this purpose. It acts on all the vital organs, builds up the whole system, and fits men and women for these high pressure days.

Chronic Bronchitis Cured.

"For ten years I had chronic bronchitis so bad that at times I could not speak above a whisper," writes Mr. Joseph Coffman, of Montmorenci. Ind. "I tried all remedies available, but with no success. Fortunately my employer suggested that I try Foley's Honey and Tar. Its effect was almost miraculous, and I am now cured of the disease. On my recommendation many people have used Foley's Honey and Tar, and always with satisfaction. J. J. Orr.

Dreadful Attack of Whooping Cough

Mrs. Ellen Harlison, of 300 Park Ave. Kansas City, Mo., writes as follows: "Our two children had a severe attack of whooping cough, one of them in the paroxysm of coughing would often faint and bleed at the nose. We tried everything we heard of without getting relief. We then called in our family doctor who prescribed Foley's Honey and Tar. With the very first dose they began to improve and we feel that it has saved their lives." Refuse substitutes. J. J. Orr.

For Coughs and Colds in Children.

I have not the slightest hesitancy in recommending Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to all who are suffering from coughs or colds," says Chas. M. Cramer, Esq., a well known watch maker, of Colombo, Ceylon. "It has been some two years since the city dispensary first called my attention to this valuable medicine and I have repeatedly used it and it has always been beneficial. It has cured me quickly of all chest colds. It is especially effective for children and seldom takes more than one bottle to cure them of hoarseness. I have persuaded many to try this valuable medicine, and they are all as well pleased as myself over the results." For sale by J. J. Orr.

FROM THE WIFE

A Ppotographic Letter from One Who Knows all About

AMATEUR PHOTOGRAPHY

Not so Short but to the Point.

The following amusing story that certainlyhas the ring of one who has "been there."

GENTLEMEN—A letter from you addressed to my husband has come to hand. You ask him to write you an article for your Photographic Annual that is to be published next year, and you put in some taffy adout his being a well known amateur, and some stuff about what he writes being of interest and that sort of thing. My husband is now on a photo graphic tour, as he calls it, and of course I open all his letters. It is not likely that my husband will be back in time to write the article you wish. When he goes off with that confounded camera of his you never know when he will come home. So I am very pleased to give you a woman's view of amateur photography, and if you print it in your annual I think you will not have another article just like it.

My unfortunate husband was stricken with the amateur photographic plague about three years ago. Up to that time I always considered him reasonbly sane. I made no objection at the time to his joining the army of photographic cranks, because, you see, I knew nothing of the subject. I have done everything I could since that time, but, although he has quit smoking at my request, he refuses to give up the camera habit. At the time he began this so called recreation my house, or perhaps I should say our house, was one of the neatest in the neighborhood. You ought to go through it now. My carpets have been ruined with those abominable chemicals which he uses. I don't know their names, but I know well the effect they have. Then the bathroom is something frightful to behold. He uses that for what he calls his dark room and has contrivances for shutting out the light.

I noticed that in one of the books you sent him, Daguerre was the inventor of photography. He may have been the inventor of photography, but I think another sulphurous gentleman with the same initial was the inventor of amateur photography.

My husband was reasonably good-tempered until he took up your diabolical art. I one time opened the door of the room in which he was working. It was all dark inside except a fearful red lamp, which threw a ruddy glow on his face and made him look as if he was going to have an epileptic fit. The moment I opened the door and let some light into the room that man went perfectly crazy. He claimed that I had spoiled a dozen of his plates, although I had touched nothing and I came near suing for a divorce because of his awful remarks. If the evil one was not the inventor of amateur photography, then I would like to know who was. Then the pictures he does turn out when he [illegible] perfectly awful. He has tried at different times to photograph the children, but the poor little dears looked like wooden images in the pictures. I went into the bath room once with the baby and put him in the bath tub. There was some water there already, and it looked clear enough, but in it was some horrible solution of silver that turned most of the baby jet black, and we haven't been able to get out the color to this day.

Then the cost of the thing is something frightful, although my husband carefully conceals what he spends on it. I came across one of the photographic dealer's bills the other day, and it was enough to make one's hair stand on end Pyrogalic acid, whatever that is, was fifty cents an ounce.

Just think if I had to pay that price for sugar! Eight dollars a pound, instead of ten cents.

Fifty cents an ounce! And that wasn't the worst of it. Now what do you think chloride of gold costs? For fifteen grains he is charged fifty cents. Now that as you know well enough, is very near twenty dollars an ounce, and twenty dollars an ounce is over three hundred dollars a pound! I don't know how many pounds of the wretched stuff he uses every week, but if he uses ten pounds of it, and I am sure ten pounds of sugar doesn't go very far in a house with a large family like ours, you would see that that is three thousand dollars for that one thing alone, not to mention the dozens of other chemicals he uses, and I am sure I don't know what the price of them is.

I tell you that amateur photography was invented to drive a poor woman crazy who has a husband that is a victim of the villianous practice. No wonder he says he can't afford a new dress for me when I ask him for it. The house is stained with horrible solutions from cellar to garret, and I am always afraid to use any cups or glasses for fear there is some dreadful poison in them. The cat took some milk out of a saucer that had something or other of potassium in it, and it just curled up and died.

I am always afraid to sweep in any part of the house for fear it will raise a dust that will spoil something that he has tacked up to dry. I wouldn't mind all this so much if he ever took a picture that was worth looking at; but as I said before, he never does. There, now, print that in your miserable photograph book if you want to.

MRS. JOHN TRIPOD.

N. B.—If you ever write to my husband again telling him that his articles on photography will be appreciated, I will burn your letter, and you will lose your postage stamps. So just remember that. MRS. J. T.

* * *

We all go plotting away trying different dodges for pleasing effects to please our sisters, and to amuse children. How many are there who, quite heedless whether the effect will be pleasing to others or not, set themselves a task, a conception, which they are determined to carry out? Were this done by one in a thousand of those who own cameras a totally new view would be taken of photography and its capacities.

Grace (aged six years, with an injured air): "I did, mamma, but the man didn't put it down."

SHAM DIAMONDS.

They Are More Common Than Is Generally Imagined.

A point in favor of the diamond is that its imitation is more or less easy of detection. A real diamond cannot be touched with a file, and a false one, though it can be made to scratch glass, will not cut quartz. Its brilliancy also fades, while the real diamond is absolutely permanent. It reflects all the light falling on its posterior surface at an angle of incidence greater than 24 degrees 13 minutes, but its counterfeit only reflects half this light.

But the imitation of the diamond may be more common than is imagined. There is a good story of one of the famous M. Bourguignon's customers. A lady went into the well known Paris atelier of sham gems and asked the price of a parure in exact imitation of the one she produced. "Was M. Bourguignon sure that the imitation would be perfect? Had he observed the peculiar beauty and purity of the stones?" The reply came: "Be calm, madame. The same workman shall have the job. You may rely upon an exact counterpart of his former work."

Pulverized quartz is used for these stones, and it is supplied in the sand from the forests of Fontainebleau. Hundreds of men and numbers of women and girls are employed in the Bourguignon business, and they make not only diamonds, but pearls, emeralds, rubies and sapphires. The girls line the false pearls with fish scales, and wax, polish and color with mineral the other "stones."—Gentleman's Magazine.

His Excellent Memory.

"John," she said, looking at him severely, "did you know that yesterday was the anniversary of our wedding?"

"Certainly, my darling, certainly," he replied, pretending that he wasn't at all surprised. "Didn't they send that little thing out from the jeweler's that I ordered for you? I shall go around today and see about it. Confound those people, anyway! They promised they'd send it yesterday without fail. If there's anything that makes me mad, it's to have people lie to me about a thing of that kind. I'd have gone somewhere else if they had said they couldn't have it ready in time. Well, I'll make such a kick when I get into town today that they won't forget next time, I'll bet. Yes, I remembered it, my dear. I thought of you all day and of that other happy day. What a glorious—why, my darling, what are you crying for?"

[illegible] she sobbed. "It isn't till next month, and you're deceiving me! Go away! Don't you dare to t-t-touch me!"

"Confound women anyhow!" he said as he went down the front steps. "They're never happy unless they're making trouble for themselves!"—Chicago Herald.

The Origin of Speech.

The dog can emit four or five different tones, each indicative of a special mental condition and each fully understood by its companions. The barn door fowl is credited with from nine to twelve distinct vocal sounds, each capable of a special interpretation by its fellows. The gestures of the lower animals are either facial, like the grimaces of the monkey, or changes of bodily attitude, like those of a dog. After citing the above mentioned facts the president of the anthropological section of the British association in a recent address went on to say that he thought it might not unreasonably be inferred that the remote progenitors of man relied upon equally lowly means of communication and that from such humble beginnings speech has been slowly evolved. Even yet we find gestures, facial expressions and certain vocal sounds often more eloquent than words.—Youth's Companion.

Prepared For All Emergencies.

It is proverbial, of course, that the French shopman always hopes to make twice as much as he should out of the Englishman and twice as much again out of the American. An English tourist who knew the French shopman, though he did not know his language, adopted a simple expedient for transacting his business abroad. He carried a card into every shop he entered on one side of which was written, "Combien?" (How much?) and on the other, "Je vous donnerai la moitie" (I will give you half). It is said that he never found further conversation necessary.

The Jewish Torah.

Of the objects used in the Jewish synagogue one of the most interesting is the Torah scroll. The Delineator describes this as parchment scroll in Hebrew, mounted on wooden rollers, wrapped in a cloth of green velvet, embroidered in silk, which is held by a silver worked belt and covered with a mantle of black velvet embroidered in gold. The upper handles of the rollers are of carved wood and the lower of ivory, with silver bells on the rollers. The Jewish Torah, or the law, is considered by the people of this race the most important and sacred portion of the Scriptures. In order that it may be kept alive in the minds of the people it is divided into as many "pericopes" as there are Sabbaths in the year, so that within a twelvemonth the entire book will have been read through. A manuscript copy is used, having been prepared by a professional scribe on parchment made of the skin of a clean animal—that is, one the flesh of which may be eaten.

Eased Consciences.

A well known English dean recently had the misfortune to lose his umbrella, and he rather suspected that its appropriation by another had not been altogether accidental. He therefore used the story to point a moral in a sermon in the cathedral, adding that if its present possessor would drop it over the wall of the deanery garden during that night he would say no more about it. Next morning he repaired to the spot and found his own umbrella and forty-five others.

How To Gain Flesh

Persons have been known to gain a pound a day by taking an ounce of SCOTT'S EMULSION. It is strange, but it often happens.

Somehow the ounce produces the pound; it seems to start the digestive machinery going properly, so that the patient is able to digest and absorb his ordinary food, which he could not do before, and that is the way the gain is made.

A certain amount of flesh is necessary for health; if you have not got it you can get it by taking

MRS. JARLEY

Successfully Presented Her Far-Famed

WAX WORKS

To a Crowded House Thursday Night.

Mrs. D. H. C. Bowen, as Mrs. Jarley, indeed caused much fluttering of the hearts of those sitting in the bald-headed row, nevertheless Mrs. Jarley together with her assistants, R. H. Orr and Wade Jones as Peter and John, proved themselves such delightful entertainers that it was with great difficulty the "Wax Works," remembered themselves to be dead.

After a piano solo by Miss Julia Lowry, the curtain arose on what Mrs. Jarley was pleased to call "The Chamber of Freaks," the characters represented were as follows: "Chinese Giant" in which Alfred James proved without a doubt that he was by far the tallest man in Tecumseh.

The "Siamese Twins" were next introduced, Floyd Slater and Fred Frost making this character one of interest, joined to-gether as they were, there was only one bone of contention between them and as Mrs. Jarley explained, they were the best of brothers, one having been born in one part of the globe while the other in an opposite part.

"The Two Headed Girl" presented a spectacle of sorrow and suffering and a person would never have thought the characters were these of Misses Maggie Haire and Anna Cutting. W. S. Dickinson as "Bluebeard" the kind benevolent husband, also the keeper of the famous "Seminary" for girls was carried to the front by Peter and John, and after adjusting the screws and placing oil on the many parts, Bluebeard, with his large key in hand, was set in motion.

One of Mrs. Jarley's most costly pieces of Wax work was next introduced, this was none other than Mrs. A. W. Mills as "Signorimi Squalini" and when wound up would endeavor to sing that late and most popular song entitled, Annie Laurie, and 'twas with great difficulty that Peter and John could induce it to stop.

Mrs. Martin Zimmerman as the "Giggler" and B. J. Pulver and Miss Edith Magers as the "Beggar Maid and King" were the closing features of the Chamber of Freaks.

The strain upon Mrs. Jarley's nerves was something great, as her act of resorting to her small bottle proved. Now what was in it only those in the front rows could determine, but judging from their exciting looks it no doubt was water.

The Chamber of Beauty proved itself as entertaining as the one previous. Joined together by links of friendship, Theo Harris and Henry Stevens represented the famous but sad part of "The Babes in the Woods" each sharing with the other his last repast, Miss Lulu Watson as "Grace Darling," Martin Zimmerman as "John Bull" with tax money in hand being presented. Mrs. Jarley showed the delighted audience "Sleeping Beauty and the Prince," Mrs. Tom McCann and Mr. Arnold representing the respective parts.

The sad story of Mrs. Allen. the discoverer of the far famed "Hair Restorer" was enacted by Miss Sena Hosmer. "Poor Deceased Little Nell," the usefull assistant of Mrs. Jarley, the one that set the hearts of Peter and John fluttering in such a manner that waist buttons were threatened was the last to hold the attention of the admiring audience, after which Mrs. Jarley repaired to her "Chamber of Horrors" which was next presented.

Jas. Smith represented in "Wax" the Boy that really did mind his parents, who always looking after the interests of their son, desired him to have a "Hot Time," but somehow as the "Boy stood on the burning deck," his neck became warped, the results no doubt of excessive heat before and after life.

It would take no great observer to tell time, but to determine the one who impersonated "Father Time" would be more difficult, Chas. Patterson, with scythe in hand kept Peter and John in such confusion that they had to postpone making goo-goo eyes.

Poor "Spoiled Child," name unknown met its tragic end by being completely squelched, through carelessness of an aunt. Fred Rosacrans and Lucy Train as "The Man all Tattered and Torn" and the "Maiden all Forlorn" proved a very interesting study. No doubt one Chinese character was enough, but there is no doubt but that Lucy Train would have made a good "Boxer." "The Cruel Butcher" otherwise known as Boyd Belcher, in his endeavor to kill the pet lamb, kept the attendants, Peter and John, dodging his terrible knife.

Last but by far not least, was Mrs. Jarley's own Jarley, "Gone but not forgotten," C. A. Slayton taking this difficult part. Mrs. Jarley again and again was forced to resort to her small bottle. It was while giving vent to her grief, that loud knocking was heard at the door, the attendants bringing something in a crate, no doubt the wax figure contained in the box was of the best material, otherwise it surely would have been damaged by boards falling across and upon its head, unveiling the mystery, consternation, siezed the audience for then in life-like majesty stood revealed Carrie Nation, the gentle wife and peace abiding citizen, with hatchet upraised and eyes flashing fire, one would never suspect the character to be that of Mrs, C. A. Wright,

Throughout the program the following selections were rendered by the below named persons: An Easter Lily drill by sixteen little girls, all in white bearing an Easter lily. A vocal solo by Miss Floy Freeman, reading, Miss Eolah Brown and vocal selections by the Sunbeam Quartette, Messrs. Dickinson, Maddox, Slater and Abrams.

The Tecumseh orchestra furnished the music for the evening. This entertainment was a novel production and from the fact that it was purely local talent, we should give great credit to the ladies instrumental in its undertaking. Quoting from Mrs. Jarley we have "Tho who think they have not paid enough will find we are open to all donations. Receipts were $90.

I WAS SO NERVOUS

[illegible]d not sleep, had dizzy spells. No appetite. Would start and

WOULD TREMBLE AT EVERY LITTLE NOISE

would then feel so weak. A friend advised me to take

KINYON'S CELERY NERVINE

IN A SHORT TIME I FELT AS WELL AS I EVER DID

That is what Mrs. M. Bronson, of 134 Tutt St., South Bend, Ind., writes, This is one of the many cases that come to our daily notice. If you are nervous and cannot sleep. If you feel irritable at times and have dizzy spells and dull pains in back of neck and down the spine, then you can get relief from the trouble by using this great remedy,

B. J. PULVER & CO.

FOR OVER TWO YEARS

I was unable to work. The trouble seemed to be in my back and I was so nervous

I COULD NOT REST OR SLEEP

nights. I tried several physicians but could get no relief. Finally I was induced to try

KINYON'S BLOOD & KIDNEY REMEDY

I used six bottles of it and it has done wonders for me.

I NOW FEEL BETTER THAN I HAVE FOR YEARS AND AM ABLE TO WORK

The above is an extract from a letter from H. H. Kimball, of Mishawaka, Ind. This remedy is without exception the best of its kind on earth. It cures where all others fail. It gets at the root of the trouble, regulates the kidneys and liver and thus the impurities are carried off and you get well. Do not fail to try it.

I got a box of Dr. W. A. Chase's Nerve Pills at Chas. A. Wright's drug store and after using the pills I am pleased to say my nerves are steadied, I sleep better and the dizzy spells are gone. I consider the pills a splendid nerve medicine."

Government Clocks.

Scattered throughout the various Washington departments are hundreds of clocks and chronometers, which cost the government annually thousands of dollars. The chronometers are the most expensive clocks in existence, and they are to be found on board every warship of the United States. These timepieces cost $400 each. The ones most consulted are those in the marble room of the senate and in the speaker's lobby of the house. Hundreds of people daily correct their watches by them.

Guerrilla Warfare.

The word guerrilla is Spanish and first came into common use in this country during the time of the peninsular war; but Spain throughout her long history has always been recognized as the country most ideally suited for guerrilla tactics. There is no region in Europe in which it is more difficult to wage successful war. "If the army of invasion is small, it is defeated; if it is large, it starves."

Tired Out

"I was very poorly and could hardly get about the house. I was tired out all the time. Then I tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and it only took two bottles to make me feel perfectly well."—Mrs. N. S. Swinney, Princeton, Mo.

Tired when you go to bed, tired when you get up, tired all the time. Why? Your blood is impure, that's the reason. You are living on the border line of nerve exhaustion. Take Ayer's Sarsaparilla and be quickly cured. $1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

Ask your doctor what he thinks of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. He knows all about this grand old family medicine. Follow his advice and we will be satisfied.

MRS. LYRA AUTEN.

Mrs. Lyra Allshouse Auten, the subject of this sketch, was born Sept. 9th, 1875, in Franklin, Mich. Was married to Fred Auten the third day of April 1894, at Rea by Rev. M. R. Saigeon, died at West Toledo, O., March 24, 1902 with tubercolosis consumption. She united with the Methodist Protestant church in the winter of 1894 at Cone.

She leaves a dear father, mother, husband, two sisters, Mrs. Louie Raymond, of Cone; Mrs. Stella Gould, of West Toledo, O., and brother, Archie Allshouse. of Pentecost, and a host of loving relatives and friends.

One little baby son, Harold Lamont, preceded her to the heavenly home five years ago. Thus has death ended another joyous life. She was always jolly, had a kind loving word for all whom she met and in fact was universally loved by all.

Although bereft of speech and prostrated with the fatal disease, she always maintained her faith in Jesus, and with her beautiful brown eyes she would gaze heavenward and plead with Jesus to give her health and strength that she might remain with those whom she loved and cherished, but God in His all-wise wisdom saw fit to remove her spirit and like a babe in its mother's arms, she fell asleep.

A short service was held at her home in West Toledo, Tuesday morning at nine o.clock and the many friends she had made in so short a period, was manifested by the crowd which gathered to pay their last respects.

She was taken to her father's home at Cone and the funeral services were conducted at the church Wednesday at 3 p. m. The church was so crowded that many could not gain an entrance. The casket was covered with beautiful flowers, tokens from loved ones. The remains were laid to rest in the family lot in Rice Cemetery.

"A neighbor ran in with a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea remedy when my son was suffering with severe cramps and was given up as beyond hope by my regular physician, who stands high in his profession. After administering three doses of it, my son regained consciousness and recovered entirely within twenty-four hours," says Mrs. Mary Haller, of Mt. Crawford, Va. This remedy is for sale by J. J. KID-NE-OIDS CURED HIS SUFFERING.

Have been afflicted with kidney and bladder diseases for the past three years, being chronic from the start, was in much pain and forced to stop work. For the past four months I have faithfully tried several of the so-called "guarantee cures" but without any benefit. I finally concluded to try Kid-Ne-Oids and began to feel better immediately after using them. I continued using them and am now permanently cured. I make this statement of my own volition and will make oath to it if necessary.—Geo. S. Estell, Kansas City, Mo.

Keeping Him In Tune.

Herr Meyer Lutz tells the following little story in Mainly About People: "Conducting once in Bradford, I noticed that the clarinet player, a young but clever and steady lad, jumped up a good deal during the progress of the opera. I found that his father, who played the trombone, sat just behind him, and every now and then he gave his son a kick, with the remark: 'Look out, Sammy! There be a flat a-comin'.'"

WORTH $300,000,000.

The President of a certain big Oil Company is said to be worth $300,000,000. A tidy bit of money and no mistake. And yet he isn't happy. In an address to a Bible class he spoke of trials and troubles of the rich and the loads they have to carry. A young lady whispered to a friend that he might wear a Benson's Porous Plaster on his back or, better still, divide the money among the members of the class. I don't know why her idea about the plaster makes me want to laugh, but it does. All the same I have seen plenty of people laugh after putting Benson's Plasters on their backs or chests, or on any other spot where there was weight, heaviness, weakness or pain. It may be the sharp stabs of neuralgia, the aches and wrenches of rheumatism; it may be colds in muscles or bones; it may be those kidney or lumbago thrusts that make you yell as at a dog bite; or it may be a strain or cramp, anything that wants quieting and comforting. Dont bother with salves, liniments, lotions, etc., or with any of the stupid and useless old style plasters. Clap on a Benson's. It relieves at once and cures quickly. It stops the pain and makes you laugh for the very ease and good feeling of it. But watch out against imitations and substitutes. All druggists, or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on receipt of 25c. each.

Caution.

This is not a gentle word—but when you think how liable you are not to purchase for 75c the only remedy universally known and a remedy that has had the largest sale of any medicine in the world since 1868 for the cure and treatment of Consumption and Throat and Lung troubles without losing its great popularity all these years, you will be thankful we called your attention to Boschee's German Syrup. There are so many ordinary cough remedies made by druggists and others that are cheap and good for light colds perhaps but for severe Coughs, Bronchitis, Croup—and especially for Consumption, where there is difficult expectoration and coughing during the nights and mornings, there is nothing like German Syrup. Sold by all druggist in the civilized world. G. G. GREEN, Woodbury, N. Y.

Cecil Rhodes' Will Gives Us Many Scholarships

IN THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY

Provides Two for Each State and Territory—Germany Also Benefited—Race Or Religion Does Not Bar the Student.

London, April 5.—The will of Cecil Rhodes provides for the establishment of colonial scholarships, as previously announced, and two American scholarships to each of the present states and territories of the United States.

All the Rhodes scholarships, American, colonial and German, are at Oxford.

The will of Mr. Rhodes also provides for five scholarships for students of German birth, at Oxford, to be nominated by Emperor William, and, commenting on the bequest, Mr. Rhodes, in a codicil telegraphed from South Africa, said:

"For a good understanding between England, Germany and the United States will secure the peace of the world, and educational relations form the strongest tie."

Mr. Rhodes divides the £100,000 bequested to Oriel college into several funds, indicating concisely how he wishes them to be applied.

Regarding the American scholarships, Mr. Rhodes says:

"Whereas, I desire to encourage and foster an appreciation of the advantages which, I implicitly believe, will result from a union of the English-speaking peoples throughout the world, and to encourage in the students from the United States who will benefit by the scholarships, an attachment to the country from which they have sprung, but, without, I hope, withdrawing them or their sympathies from the land of their adoption or birth."

The will provides that no student shall be qualified or disqualified for election to a scholarship on account of race or religious opinion.

Mr. Rhodes desires that the students should not patronize any particular college but distribute themselves throughout the university. The trustees are allowed to suspend or remove any scholar at their discretion.

Mr. Rhodes expresses the hope that the trustees will arrange an annual dinner and reunion for all students and scholarship graduates who are able to attend and invite thereto as guests "persons who have shown sympathy with the views expressed by me in my will."

To Avoid the Duties.

Washington, April 5.—Complaints are coming in to the treasury department that large quantities of merchandise, particularly rice, is being brought into the Danish West Indian ports in the expectation of being able to ship it into the United States after the ratification of the treaty of cession, free of duty. The ports of the islands are free ports, and hence goods landed there are not subject to customs duties. It is pointed out that after the ratification of the treaty, and before congress takes action to prevent it, all goods shipped from the islands to this country or Porto Rico must be admitted duty free. Therefore a shipload of valuable tobacco might now be sent to St. Croix, and if reshipped to Tampa or another nearby United States port after the ratification and before congressional action, it must be admitted free of duty.

Danish Officials Attacked Treaty.

Copenhagen, April 5.—There was an exciting debate on the Danish West Indies islands treaty in the executive session of the landsthing, or upper house, Friday. The opposition members violently attacked the treaty and plied the foreign minister, Dr. Deuntzer, with numerous questions, to which he replied firmly and clearly. There is great public interest in this, and the agitation and excitement are intense. Both sides are confident of success. A strong effort is being made to identify the members of the landsthing who are suspected of furnishing information to Congressman Richardson. So far it has not been successful.

Corporations Can't Own Cemeteries.

St. Paul, April 5.—It is illegal in Minnesota to form a corporation to own or organize a cemetery for pecuniary profit. In the case of P. E. Brown and others against the Maple Wood Cemetery association of Luverne, the supreme court has reversed the lower court. The private incorporators took in more than $6,000 from the sale of lots and put in their pockets, as owners of the cemetery. The supreme court decision says all this money must be accounted for to the lot owners, as stockholders, and used in improvement of the cemetery.

Indians Offer Their Land.

Washington, April 5.—The secretary of the interior has transmitted to the senate an agreement with the Red Lake and Pembina bands of Chippewa Indians of Minnesota for the cession to the United States of the western portion of the Red Lake reservation, containing 256,152 acres. Senator Clapp introduced a bill ratifying the agreement.

Ball Player Offered Big Salary.

Philadelphia, April 5.—Lajoie, the celebrated second baseman of the Philadelphia American League club, has refused an offer of a salary of $7,000 a year for three years, made him by an agent of the New York National League club.

All Three Killed.

Freeport, Ill., April 5.—A westbound Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul passenger train Friday struck a buggy near Kittridge, containing three young people, Lily and Lizzie Shipman and Earl Kahl of Brookville, killing all of them.

THE FIGHT IS ON

House Will Take Up Reciprocity Bill This Week.

BUT FEW OPPOSERS LEFT

Some Opposition Leaders Have Given Up Hope and Won't Debate—A Few Favor Immediate Annexation of the Islands.

Washington, April 5.—The great battle over Cuban reciprocity, which created such a protracted struggle among the republicans, both in caucus and in the committee on ways and means, will be fought out on the floor of the house this week. The ultimate passage of the Payne bill, providing for a 20 per cent reduction on the products of Cuba, after the negotiation of a reciprocity treaty and the enactment of our immigration laws by the republic of Cuba, is regarded as a foregone conclusion, but the situation is a complicated one owing to the divisions among the democrats, as well as the republicans. How far the republican opponents of the proposed legislation will carry their opposition is not definitely determined. The strength of this opposition has dwindled until it probably numbers less than thirty. On the other hand, up to the present time, a large majority of the democrats favor the greatest possible freedom of trade with Cuba and would vote for a deeper cut than the ways and means bill proposes. Others, like Newlands of Nevada, are in favor of the immediate annexation of the islands, and quite a number under the lead of the Louisiana members will oppose strenuously any tariff concessions whatever. It is hinted that the attitude of the democrats in the senate, who have fixed on a program of opposition, there may result, before the vote is taken, in more unity of action on the part of the democrats of the house. Some of the republican opponents of the bill will speak against it, but the leaders of the republican opposition show a strong disinclination to participate in the debate on the ground that there is no hope of defeating the bill and that their speeches would become democratic campaign material in the coming congressional campaign. The bill will be brought up tomorrow as a revenue bill, which is privileged under the rules, but no special order will be brought in for its consideration.

The expectation of the friends of the Chinese exclusion bill is that its consideration by the senate will be concluded by the middle of the present week, if not before. The Philippine government bill will be taken up immediately afterwards. This bill probably will occupy attention for a considerably longer time than has any measure since the Philippine tariff bill was passed, and the democratic members of the committee on the Philippines are now very industriously engaged in preparing for the debate. They do not profess to be able to defeat the measure but say they will make strenuous effort to secure material amendments.

There is general preparation about the senate for the Cuban reciprocity bill, as it is already apparent that when it comes up for consideration in the senate its passage will be stubbornly resisted.

The conference on the oleomargarine bill probably will take place during the week, and as the senate made a vast number of amendments to the bill, the conference may be somewhat prolonged.

Negroes Must Get Out.

Guthrie, Ok., April 7.—The last day for the negroes to remain in Lawton, Oklahoma, passed with no direct attacks on the colored people, but today tells the story. Many of the negroes have left, stating that they will not receive protection. Many, however, are determined to remain. Some own property and some are in business, and it is this claim that is dividing the sentiment of white people of city and vicinity. The county officials still expect trouble. One hundred deputies have been sworn in, and an attempt will be made to control the situation, however serious it may become. It is the business element that is asking protection from mobs. The governor again stated yesterday, if necessary he will use extreme means to thwart any lawless action, and he has the proferred assistance of federal authorities.

President Goes to Charleston.

Washington, April 7.—This afternoon at 3:30 o'clock the president and a party of friends will leave Washington for a visit to the Charleston exposition, going via the Southern railway. The personnel of the party is as follows: The president, Mrs. Roosevelt, Attorney-General and Mrs. Knox, Secretary Wilson, Secretary Cortelyou, Assistant Secretary Loeb and Mrs. Loeb, Commander W. S. Cowles of the navy and Mrs. Cowles, Dr. John F. Urie, Mr. J. K. Gracie, Hon. Murat Halstead and Mr. M. C. Datta.

Indian Village Destroyed.

Vancouver, B. C., April 7.—The Sioux Indian village at Portage la Prairie has been destroyed by floods. There was no loss of life. The people of the town of Souris are completely isolated from the outside world. The valley of the Souris river, which is two miles wide, is flooded many feet deep and the water is still rising. Fifty residents of the flooded Portage la Prairie district are isolated at Bethel school house. The town of Melita is also cut off by the flood.

Crowds Witnessed Hanging.

Sumterville, Fla., April 7.—Henry Wilson, a negro, was hanged here Saturday for the murder of Lee Graham, a prominent young white man. Great crowds witnessed the execution, but there was no violence as had been anticipated from the fact that a previous effort had been made to lynch the negro.

Carrie Gave Him a Hatchet.

Ann Arbor, Mich., April 5.—William Kent, a member of the North Side Lyceum, has just received a token from Carrie Nation in the form of a tiny gold hatchet with a small diamond setting. Kent recently won a debate in the high school Clenadium on the question, "Resolved, that Carrie Nation's influence has been beneficial." Wishing to get Carrie's autograph, Kent wrote her of the debate. In reply he received the hatchet, engraved with "Carrie Nation." In a letter accompanying the trophy, Carrie referred to her work and alluded to the gay college boys of Ann Arbor as the "jewels of the nation whom I smash to save."

Grand Trunk Train Derailed While Passing a Switch.

ONE KILLED--FIVE INJURED

Train Had Passed Switch, All Save Last Two Cars, Which Were Thrown Against an Engine, Causing the Wreck.

Battle Creek, Mich., April 7.—One dead and five injured is the casualty record of a Grand Trunk wreck which occurred at Milletts Sunday morning at 3 o'clock. No. 6, eastbound passenger train, had the right of way, and the engine and seven cars passed through a switch safely, but the last coach and Pullman sleeper were thrown off the track and against engine No. 1147, which was attached to a westbound extra freight. The freight engine and both cars went into a heap. A wrecker was called from Battle Creek.

Through official sources it is learned that Abraham Burnstine of Detroit, who occupied a seat in the coach, was the only one killed. He carried a steamship passage for Europe. C. Minahan of Providence, R. I., was badly injured and is now at a Detroit hospital. Burnstine's body was taken to Charlotte. M. J. Orzechowski of Chicago received two bad scalp wounds, and J. L. Gordon of Rochester, N. Y., was badly bruised. Frank Thomas of Mt. Clemens and J. L. Zeigler of Detroit, the latter a brakeman on the passenger, sustained slight injuries.

It is the opinion of those in authority that the switch had been tampered with.

Conductor Charles E. Spencer and Engineer Clark of Battle Creek were in charge of the passenger. Conductor James R. Bunce and Engineer O. I. Campbell of this city had the extra freight. The coach and sleeper were badly damaged.

One of the trucks on the rear coach caught the points of the switch so as to run the last two cars onto the sidetrack, where they struck the freight engine. The engineer and fireman were examining the freight engine when the passenger was going through. They saw the two cars jump the track and escaped injury by jumping out of reach. The passenger train was going at a high rate of speed when the accident occurred.

Personal Assets Less.

Lansing, Mich., April 7.—Assessors in Lansing and in many of the cities of the state report a great falling off in the amount of personal property subject to assessment this year, the efforts of the tax commission to reach the personal belongings of citizens for taxation having resulted in the discovery of new methods of evading the law. This is not done by making false statements but by transferring title to personal property to persons outside the state or to those who, having no realty, are not discovered by the assessors.

Cigar Dealers Combine.

Port Huron, Mich., April 7.—The latest "judicious combination" to be formed in this city was perfected Saturday when all the cigar dealers of the city pledged themselves not to cut rates or give prizes with cigar sales. All 5-cent cigars costing over $32 per thousand will hereafter be sold for 5 cents straight, and all 10-cent goods costing over $60 per thousand, 10 cents straight. The action was brought about by several druggists entering into a cut-rate cigar sale, which promises to demoralize the business.

AN APPEAL FOR IRELAND.

Redmond, Irish National Leader, Speaks at Detroit.

Detroit, Mich., April 7.—Charged with an emotion most potent, the love of their native land, an audience of 1,000 sons of the Emereld isle at the Detroit opera house Sunday afternoon listened attentively to a recital of her wrongs, breaking into tumultuous applause at the mention of efforts being made to redress them.

The meeting was called under the direction of prominent members of the United Irish societies of Detroit for the purpose of affording well known speakers an opportunity to work up interest in the cause of Ireland. T. A. E. Weadock presided and the stage was occupied by nearly 50 vice-presidents, including local Irishmen prominent in the clergy, political and social circles. The principal speaker of the afternoon was William P. Redmond, leader in the Irish nationalist party and member of parliament from County Clare, Ireland. Mr. Redmond in part said:

"The cause of Ireland stands today in a stronger position than ever before. There is absolute union. In every county, every town, a branch of the United Irish league exists.

"The objects of the league are identical with those of the land league of years ago; to restore to Ireland its parliament, wrested from us 10 years ago by fraud and force. It has a greater object, that of making Ireland a free, self-governed country. Whatever the result of an appeal to the people of Great Britain may be in Ireland, there is never any change. Whether the appeal comes at the end of five years, three years or now, let it be as often as it will, the result is unchanged.

"As long as the grass grows green; as long as the rivers ripple to the ocean, so long will the desire for liberty remain fixed in the hearts of the Irish people," declared Mr. Redmond. "Every important essential of the British constitution is suspended in our country. We have no free speech, no free press. There are laws under which the people of Ireland become criminals for doing things which would not make them such in Scotland or Wales. It is a government of despotism, so detestable in all its features that nothing except the want of arms and munitions of war prevents the Irish from standing up for their rights as through God the Boers are doing today. Garrisons, spread all over Ireland, make it impossible for the people to prepare for any uprising. British fleets, cruising along our coasts, are ready at any time to bombard our shores."

Went Insane While Waiting.

Flint, Mich., April 7.—While waiting to take a train for California Saturday morning, Sherman Hill of Davison township was suddenly taken violently insane. He had been in poor health for some time and brooding over his prospective journey and its possible outcome, together with the excitement attendant upon the preparations for his departure, caused his mind to give way. The unfortunate man was taken back to his home to await developments in his case.

Scholarships Look Tempting.

Ann Arbor, Mich., April 7.—The scholarships of $1,500 a year, established by Cecil Rhodes, are causing much interest among students at the university, who are wondering how the plums are to be awarded. President Angell expressed his warm approval of Rhodes's plan.

The Mark of the Hand.

When the hand touches anything, it leaves upon the object touched a representation of that part which came in contact with the object. This impression is not visible to the eye. It is made by the acid of moisture exuded from the skin. If you place the palm of your hand flat on a sheet of blank paper, you may not see the faintest trace of the hand, and many people will be angry at the suggestion that there is any exudation—their hands are perfectly dry, they do not suffer from perspiration. Nevertheless if a metal plate covered with a certain chemical preparation be passed over the paper the representation of the hand becomes visible in great detail.

High Pressure Days.

Men and women alike have to work incessantly with brain and hand to hold their own nowadays. Never were the demands of business, the wants of the family, the requirements of society, more numerous. The first effect of the praiseworthy effort to keep up with all these things is commonly seen in a weakened or debilitated condition of the nervous system, which results in dyspepsia, defective nutrition of both body and brain, and in extreme cases in complete nervous prostration. It is clearly seen that what is needed is what will sustain the system, give vigor and tone to the nerves, and keep the digestive and assimilative functions healthy and active. From personal knowledge, we recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla for this purpose. It acts on all the vital organs, builds up the whole system, and fits men and women for these high pressure days.

CHAPTER IX.

A SERPENT WITH ITS FANGS DRAWN.

WHEN Carmen had recovered and the two were seated again, both silently thinking, it occurred to Craig to glance in the direction of the duenna. [illegible] had not moved or glan[illegible] for she was still placidly [illegible] that indescribable work.

It was Craig who broke the [illegible]

"Miss Pendleton," he began, and she looked up in amazement. "That is your true name," he continued, "and I think I should so address you." he added.

"Not if you are to be the friend I need, as you will know after [illegible] I have to tell yo[illegible]," she said [illegible].

"What then [illegible]"

"Carmen," she replie[illegible].

"So be it," he said g[illegible] address you by your given name [illegible] in all things I will try to be [illegible] what Burr would have been ha[illegible] lived. But that is not what I intend[illegible] to say. There is something conc[illegible] the death of Burr that you s[illegible] know. Perhaps you have heard that [illegible] left his fortune to me."

"No," she replied, "I had not [illegible] of it."

"He did, absolutely, as p[illegible] pos[illegible] that is not true. It was left to [illegible] that is, the bulk of it was left to [illegible] for you."

"In [illegible] for—me?"

"Yes. [illegible]"

"[illegible] he [illegible] know"—

"[illegible] There was a document [illegible] his will. That we will [illegible] her later. He only believed [illegible] might be a half brother [illegible] in the world, probably in Mexico, and he directed me to sea[illegible]"

She raised one h[illegible] stopp[illegible] him.

"Mr. Wyndham" [illegible] interrupted her.

"[illegible] have forgott[illegible] ing, Ca[illegible] [illegible] said.

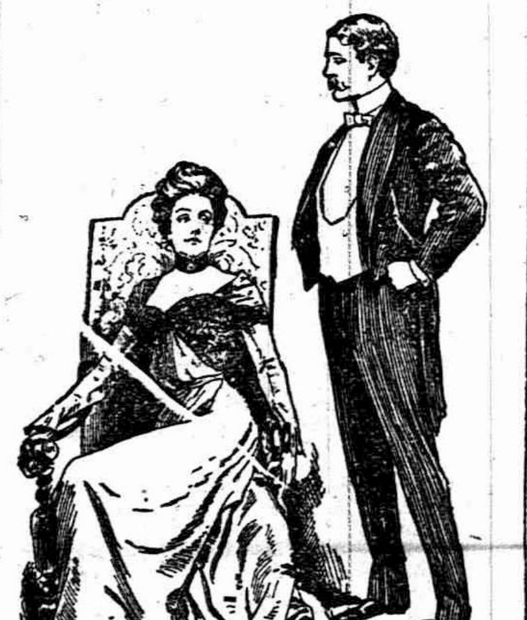
"Wh[illegible] it?"

"My [illegible] name."

"Oh, we [illegible] will finish [illegible] I was about to sa[illegible] have a rea[illegible] a very strong reason, which you will understand after we [illegible] talked a[illegible] the duel, why I do not [illegible] one wo[illegible] about Burr's prope[illegible]. The t[illegible] is not at hand until we h[illegible] discussed [illegible] duel, and I cannot go h[illegible] tom[illegible]. I inherited my mother's [illegible] and am what you call rich. S[illegible] that very subject that broug[illegible] to New York."

"What subject?"

"Burr's estate. You must rememb[illegible] that I did not know that my brother was murdered. I only knew that he was dead. I would have come at once had I known. Let us wait for another interview for all that we have to talk over. I am dazed tonight, I think. I must have time to compose myself and to give careful thought to what there is to do. Ah, Craig"—she uttered the name quite naturally—"you do not know half the story yet. There is so much more. Will you come to me tomorrow at noon?" she asked.



"Will you come to me tomorrow at noon?" she asked.

"Yes."

"I will have breakfast served here in this little parlor at that hour, and you will share it with me."

"I offer an amendment, Carmen. I will call here with a carriage at noon. You and I and the stone image at the [illegible] end of the room will drive out [illegible] her and have luncheon at a place I know."

She assented without question, and neither could foresee what grave complications this arrangement was destined to bring about.

A moment later Craig bade the sister of his friend good night [illegible] was driven to the Waldorf, where for ten minutes he showed himself conspicuously in the corridors. Then he had himself driven directly to his own apartments.

It was midnight when he entered, and the party were just leaving the card table to [illegible] the ample spread that had [illegible] prepar[illegible] for them by Wyndh[illegible] [illegible]lers

Of [illegible] they chaffed him about his abs[illegible] Men always do that sort of [illegible], and Wyndham expected it. Es[illegible] alone had nothing to say regar[illegible]ng the matter.

[illegible] soon as there was an opportunity Carleton Biggs drew Wyndham aside and whispered:

"Awfully sorry, old man. I played as recklessly as I could, but I won like a house afire for all that. The Mexican is the biggest loser, but I think it is because he seemed to have no heart in the game. Half the time he didn't seem to know what he held, and almost always he had to be told when to come in. Funny thing, that. I have been told that he is an expert with cards."

"It's all right, Carleton," replied Craig. "I am glad you won. The winnings are yours, you know; the losses would have been mine. Not a word. You have done me a greater service than you know. I think I know why Escudera did not pay much attention to the game, but it does not matter."

The game was brought to a close according to the arrangement, at 6 o'clock in the morning, and as the guests were departing Escudera, who had partially retrieved his losses of the earlier part of the game, loitered behind the others and was the last to bid his host goodby.

Wyndham guessed that he had something to say, but he was hardly prepared for what came.

"I should not think you would enjoy living in these rooms," he said.

"Why not?" asked Wyndham.

"Oh, nothing; only there is something suggestive of the uncanny about a place where a man has been murdered."

"Not when that man was your best and dearest friend, senor. On the contrary, these rooms keep me reminded of something that I have to do."

"What is that?"

"[illegible] the murderer to justice."

The [illegible] shrugged his shoulders. "I will confess, [illegible] that I have felt rather gruesome here [illegible] not been here before since that night. You know I belong to a superstitious race. Good morning."

"Now, what the devil was he driving at?" muttered Wyndham after Escudera was gone. "He had something else to say, but he didn't dare say it. I w[illegible] was that made him ne[illegible] was in the rooms w[illegible] a man or was it because he [illegible] over my sen[illegible]? Whatever it was, his time fo[illegible] uncertainty is short. He at least will soon know the worst."

Instead of taking a few hours of rest, as most men under the circumstances would have done, Craig Wyndham plunged into a cold bath, after which old James gave him a thorough "rub down." Then, although it was still so early th[illegible] he knew none of his acq[illegible] would be abroad, he went out [illegible] a sharp walk [illegible] more.

[illegible] [illegible]ds stimulants, takes [illegible] cold water baths, he [illegible] up for seventy-two [illegible] park policeman to w[illegible] he rested from his [illegible]ation.

With the knowledge he now possessed he believed that he could not only defy the machinations of Carlos Escudera, but that he need no longer pretend friendship for a man he hated; also he resolved that he would make no effort to conceal from him or his followers—if he possessed any—what he should do that day. In other words, he felt entirely competent to care for and protect Carmen Pendleton. There may be some who read who have had this same sensation and can understand better than it can be described here the sensations by which he was actuated.

It was in consequence of these several emotions—if they may be defined by that word—that at the appointed hour of noon Craig appeared at the door of the hotel where the sister of his friend was stopping and, without any attempt at concealment, drove away with her and the duenna. Nor was it with surprise that, as they drove up the avenue, he was saluted with raised hat and flourishing bow by Carlos Escudera.

Carmen's seat in the carriage was such that she did not see the Mexican, and it was therefore supposable that the Mexican did not see her. The duenna, being on the front seat, was, of course, unseen, and Wyndham smiled when he realized that after all it was only his own movements that Escudera and his hirelings were watching. As yet Escudera did not even suspect the presence of his cousin in the city.

At Mount St. Vincent they sought a far corner of the restaurant. The duenna, Maria, was given an adjoining table. A tip to the waiter made it impossible for other guests to occupy the nearby tables at an hour when there were so many that were vacant in other parts of the room, and thus Wyndham felt confident that they would be undisturbed.

They had been seated scarcely half an hour and had not yet got beyond mere generalities in their talk when there came a most unexpected interruption.

Wyndham, who sat with his back toward the door, saw Carmen make a sudden start and then turn deathly pale, and he heard her exclaim, almost under her breath:

"Dios mio! Carlos esta aqui!"

He understood her words as well as if she had spoken in English, but he remained perfectly calm and unmoved. He did not even turn his head, but he could hear the footsteps of a person approaching them, and his ears were so well attuned to time that he recognized the step of Carlos Escudera.

"Be calm, Carmen," he said rapidly and in a low voice. "Remember that you are not in Mexico now."

She recovered herself instantly, but the next moment Escudera was beside them.

"This is an unexpected pleasure, senorita," he said coldly in Spanish, ignoring utterly the presence of Wyndham. "I did not know that my fiancee was in the city."

Wyndham saw that he was deadly pale and that he was struggling with all his strength of will to speak calmly. This man, usually so self possessed, for once had lost his power of self repression. His eyes seemed sunken back in his head. His white teeth gleamed ominously under his black mustache. His hands trembled with excitement. Craig thought, somewhat vaguely—for he was intent upon watching the man—how fortunate it was that Carmen had told him that she was affianced to Escudera! He realized in that moment how appalling the statement would have been had he not already been fortified against it. At the same instant he decided that it was best to treat the Mexican in a perfectly natural manner. Anybody who has found himself at some time in a critical position realizes how rapidly one can and does think at such moments.

He sprang to his feet before Escudera had ceased speaking and exclaimed in a tone that evidenced both surprise and pleasure, for Escudera did not know that he understood Spanish.

"Hello, Escudera! This is an unexpected pleasure. I supposed you were sleeping the sleep of the just after last night. Permit me, Miss Pendleton, to present my friend, Senor Escudera. He comes from your own country, by the way. Escudera, Miss Pendleton."

It was a shot that told, for it staggered Escudera utterly.

If such a thing were possible, he became a shade whiter than before, and for once in his life he was outdone in presence of mind.

It was clever, too, on the part of Wyndham, that assumption for Carmen of the name of Pendleton, for it explained without further words their presence there together.

Escudera bowed with a gesture that was truly Mexican, and he smiled with an insolence that he did not try to conceal, and while he bowed and smiled he made another heroic effort to control himself. In that, however, he was only partly successful, for he still ignored Wyndham. He could not play the game with the cool head of his antagonist. There were mileposts beyond which he could not travel.

"I do not think that I require an introduction to you by this fellow or by anybody," he said in Spanish, believing that Wyndham could not understand him, "but I do require an explanation of your presence here."

"You have it," she replied calmly, "in the letter you sent to me announcing the death of Burr Pendleton, in which you refrained from telling me the truth."

It was a delicate method of telling him that he had lied to her, and it angered him beyond endurance.

"Shall I tell you why I deceived you?" he demanded hotly, forgetting that he had demanded an explanation and that instead he was making one. "It was because I respected your feelings; because I believed the knowledge of how your half brother came to his death would shock you; because already I knew the name of the man who killed him and only awaited evidence to convict him of the crime, and that man, the man who killed Pendleton, is your present companion—this man who sits opposite you at the table."

"Senor Escudera," he said, also speaking Spanish, "it is my misfortune or good fortune, whichever you choose to call it, to understand you. It is certainly my good fortune to recognize in you a despicable scoundrel. Will you leave us quietly, for the sake of the lady, or shall I call"—

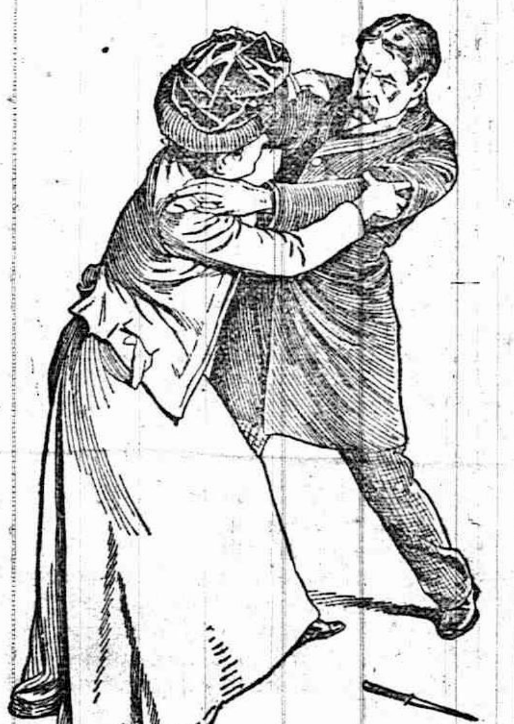
He did not have time to complete what he would have said, for the Mexican, who now lost every vestige of self control, started back and with a rapid motion thrust his right hand into the opening of his waistcoat.

In an instant it was out again, and something—even the quickness of the eye could not determine what it was—gleamed in his grasp.

The hand was drawn back. Carmen uttered a low cry. Wyndham started forward, for he knew perfectly well the meaning of that gesture, the one that had hurled death into the heart of Burr Pendleton, and he intended to seize the Mexican before he could cast the terrible missile. But Escudera's wrist was seized from behind, the weapon was torn with a sudden wrench from his grasp, and he stood before them like a writhing serpent whose fangs have been drawn.

Nobody had noticed Maria, the duenna. Her presence was utterly forgotten, but she was a Mexican Indian woman, and she knew the man who had interrupted the luncheon. During the scene she stole behind him, as if she anticipated what he would do, or suspected that he might do it, and when he drew back his hand to cast the weapon she tore the implement from him and left him harmless.

In the excess of passion under which the Mexican struggled it is not strange that his rage turned upon the woman who had disarmed him. He wheeled like lightning and seized her by the throat with both hands, but his fingers had scarcely time to tighten before two powerful arms reached around him, one on either side. His wrists were seized in a grasp that was tenfold stronger than his own, his fingers relaxed and loosed their hold, his arms were drawn resistlessly behind him, and he was pushed unceremoniously though not rapidly toward the door.



He seized her by the throat.

The waiter, who happened to be the only witness to all that had occurred, obeying a nod from Wyndham, preceded them and opened the side entrance, and there Craig lifted the Mexican bodily from his feet and dropped him outside. Then he closed the door and returned quietly to the table.

"I think, Carmen," he said—"I think we may now proceed with our luncheon."

And she looked at him with eyes that spoke all too plainly of the admiration she felt.

We record the death today of one of our old and respected German citizens, Fred Kurfess. He was a miller by trade and worked in the mills here for more than a quarter of a century. He has held public office, and was for years secretary of the arbeiter society. His son Rudolph, of Chicago, Fred, of New Albany, Ind., daughters Mary and Rosa and husband, Chas. Braun, of Jackson, and Lizzie, of this village, were at his bedside—Manchester Enterprise.

A Telegram reporter was sold so completely the other day that the story is too good to keep. While talking with an elderly man who has always, and is yet, a great fisherman, the old gentleman remarked that he once caught a fish that weighed one hundred and thirty-five pounds. We reminded him that he was talking to a newspaper reporter and his story might get into print, but he laughingly replied that it made no difference as it was true, and for proofs pointed to his wife. Her maiden name was Fish.—Adrian Telegram.
